Germans in Trenches at Antwerp

This is one of the British naval guns the Germans found in front of Antwerp after they had driven the Belgians and their few British aids from the city. The gun had been removed from a war vessel and carried inland, and there placed in a pit. There has been much criticism of the failure of the British to give sufficient aid to the Belgians before Antwerp. It has been said that the resignation of Prince Louis of Battenberg, who has just resigned as first sea lord of the admiralty, was criticized for this. Winston Churchill, chief of the British saval department, has also come in for criticoism.
