AN AWAKENING AT LAST

CONSIDERING the dangers that beset the paths of all these days, the work of preserving the purity and the virility of our race, taken up by the Oregon Social Hygiene Society is one of the most meritorious and patriotic movements in the history of the state. Through education along matters pertaining to sex, the organization hopes to properly teach what too often boys have been learning through vicious speeches at the swimming hole and girls from others than their parents, and, in addition, to warn the young people in time against the dire dangers and oftentimes lifelong miseries that are more often than otherwise the result of straying from the straight and narrow path.

How many of you men, reading this, can say that among your boyhood associates, the state of continental Italy was looked up to with respect? Few, very few, indeed. Instead, in most cases, the ridicule of the older boys, and their boastful recitals of illicit deeds brought the belief that the career of a youthful Lothario was preferable in every way.

Connected with this was the belief in the minds of many of these youngsters, girls as well as boys, that immorality was not a disgrace, nor even wrong—unless it was discovered. Too late have these awakened to find that their libertinism has wrecked their lives, leaving them prematurely aged when they should be in the prime of life, and totally unfit to bring into the world children otherwise than diseased and weakened mentally and physically.

With this awakening to the terrible predicament they were plunged into by their own ignorance, many is the clenched hand that has been upraised in curse against the parent who neglected to properly instruct them. And considering the prudery and false modesty of the parent on such an all-important matter, not only for the child, but for generations unborn, is it strange that the child should curse? In comparison, this silence on the part of the parent is as the sending of a vessel into strange, rock-strewn waters without chart, light or compass.

But the awakening has come at last, and in addition to imparting to those near them the secrets of life and the penalties of violating the sex laws, the missionaries of the new gospel of living are carrying their message afar, to instruct the parent as well as the child. Toward this great end, the Oregon Social Hygiene Society will hold a meeting at the opera house Tuesday night. All men in the city are invited to attend. It is their duty to do so.

This meeting is worth the support of every citizen. The topics are of vital interest to every citizen. The campaign is a statewide campaign, and our community must do its share in this great work.

The sex problem touches every life sooner or later. Every child of our city must meet it. A sane, careful, helpful discussion of this vital matter should appeal to every parent.

Scattered Shots

YOU ARE right, Prometheus, there ARE more necks than records broken by the aviators.

IN VIEW OF THE immense orders for supplies pouring into our Eastern cities from the warring nations, some irrelevant cuss proposes the suspension of prayers for peace.

"DOESN'T THE Good Book say 'Love thine Enemy,' and don't we learn that lick is our enemy?" asked the Inebriated One.

THE STINGY MAN may not be as popular as his more liberal friend, The Good Fellow, but he apparently takes his satisfaction of knowing that if a pinch does come, he has the best of friends—the dollar—to rely upon.

IGNORANCE of vital health laws will be no excuse to offer after the meeting at the opera house Tuesday night.

YES, EGBERT, you are right in defining a hiccup as "a message from departed spirits."

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

"Cheerfulness"

By REV. GEORGE A. AVERY, Pastor, Mt. Laki Church.

All of us have met the pessimist, sunshine, and his fresh air, which are so free to all; seed time and harvest; summer and winter; each day with its possibilities and each night with its refreshing and reviving sleep; life itself, and hope and love. All of this we have, and much more. Get the vision of the wonder of it all, and see:

Yet how many there are who, unconsciously, perhaps, practice a subtle sort of pessimism, which soon becomes a habit that is most difficult to detect!

Have we not seen the man who is always despondent?—the one who is ever complaining?—for whom it seems easier to see the clouds with which life's horizon is sometimes over, than to perceive the sunshine beneath them? It is he who goes through life sowing the seed of discontent behind him. There are too many of such persons in the world—too many for the welfare of others.

On the other hand, we have admired the optimist and his cheerful view of life. It is he whose influence, while "quiet as the dew which no man heareth fall," is "like to the sunlight, gladdening, brightening all."

Well spoke the wise man of old who said that a merry heart doeth good like a medicine. You have a friend whose very presence brightens those with whom he comes in contact. He sees the best in everything, and he lets everyone know what he sees. The number of such men can never be too great.

A man will form the habit of seeing what he wants to in life. So why not see the bright things and make cheerfulness a habit? There is a bright side to every life which is just waiting to be seen. There are few of us so unfortunate but that there are others worse off than we. Is it the daily drudgery of life under which we faint? There are those whose lives contain burdens greater than ours, but who, seeing in the most menial of service a duty to be performed for God, go cheerfully about their tasks. Is there some great sorrow in our lives? Does everything seem to be wrong? Cheer up! "God is in His heaven." "All's right with the world!" He has promised to care for us. Let us believe that it shall be even as He has said.

No matter what our lot, there is much for which we should be thankful. The things all about us—the things to which we have become so accustomed that we take them as a matter of course, and never stop to think of them as blessings—God's

Judged by a Piano

Did you ever notice that upon entering a house almost the first thing you notice is the presence or absence of a piano?

You instinctively judge the taste and refinement of the family accordingly.

How is your home thus classified by your friends? If you have no instrument any of our pianos would easily give the desired refinement to that home, and our terms can be met by almost anyone. Convince yourself by dropping in some afternoon or evening to see what we have.

William Rockefeller Before Federal Judge

William Rockefeller, one of the wealthiest men of the world, was arraigned in the criminal branch of the United States district court, before Judge Foster in New York recently, on the charge that he had broken the Sherman act by conspiring with other directors of the New Haven railroad in organizing a monopoly of transportation lines in New England. His was the first arraignment of the twenty-one wealthy directors accused in the grand jury indictment. The photographer caught him as he sat in court facing the judge and waiting to plead not guilty. After he had done that he went to the office of a United States commissioner to give a bond for $5,000.

"I can't talk," he whispered to the newspaper men who tried to interview him. His manner bore out the statements made in his behalf during the money trust investigation in Washington, that he had a throat affection which made it impossible for him to speak above a whisper. Mr. Rockefeller has avoided giving testimony on other occasions on the same plea.

Torpedo Control Perfected
In the opinion of Brigadier General Weaver, chief of the coast artillery, it is now possible to control, as far as the eye can see with a telescope, a craft laden with dynamite, by the use of the radio system. An operator can direct such a torpedo with surety against an enemy's battleship lying several miles to sea.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

BY MARGARET MASON

(Written for the United Press)

A chicken, a broiler, a squab and a bird.

Fair woman's been dubbed by mere man.

And so she is trying to dress for the part.

And wear all the feathers she can.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Any sordid commercial soul can feather her own nest, but it takes a true sartorial genius to feather her own costume artistically. My lady has this winter gone back to her old friend, the ostrich, for her borrowed plumage.

The ostrich plume has returned with added prestige to its high station atop some of the very best hats. It is in its new role of fringe, however, that it tickles the feminine fancy most of this season. The delicacy and softness of this fragile fairy-like fringe of feather fronds makes it a particularly desirable garniture on light, fluffy evening frocks, zossamer lingerie and diaphanous negligees, but it is also pressed into service as suitable trimming on wraps and neck flings.

A ravishing set of underwear, consisting of an under-bodice, panties and a petticoat of flesh color Pussy-willow taffeta, makes good the saying "beauty unadorned adorned the most." It is of frills and furbelows. Its beaded edges are finished with the soft fringe of the flesh-colored ostrich fronds and a tiny garland of French ribbon rosebuds—one on each pantie, one on the front of the corset cover and four at discreet intervals around the bottom of the petticoat, make up its simplicity.

An apricot tinted negligee of crepe de chine cut on loose flowing kimono lines relies for ornament solely upon a fringe of apricot ostrich, which borders it around the hem, up the fronts and around the neck and sleeves. A coquettish boudoir cap with a frill of ostrich fringe and shirred satin ribbon slippers, feathers around the tops completes this delectable set.

A perfect dream of a frock which shows the feather trimming off to advantage is worn by the prima donna of "The Lilac Domino," the first of a season of opera comique presented by Andreas Dippel in New York. The dainty gown is built of shell pink satins and tulle. The waist, which is a cross between a light blouse and a semi-fitted jacket, is of the satin. It buttons up the front and the low collar, which extends from shoulder to shoulder in the rear, where there is also an upstanding medical collar of the feather fringe.

The little jacket extends to below the hips, where it ends in a feather finish, and its transparent sleeves of pink net are finished softly about the hands with the same trimming. The skirt is an ankle length, according to fashion, of the satin, over which two full founces of the fringe, edged with ostrich fringe flout their airy charms.

Appropos of Thespian fashions, in the window of an exclusive Broadway shop is displayed a gown designed for a well known stage celebrity noted for her original and startling toilettes. This particular frock consists of a soft white blouse of china silk with a demure little round turn-over collar and a plaited skirt of dark, extremely blue serge, which buttons with large white pearl buttons high up on the blouse in extremely short-waisted effect. Straps of the serge passed under like over each shoulder.

An obvious steal from the "Little Dorrit" and "David Copperfield" suits affected by all the small fry this past season, it truly promised a certain ludicrous chic and quaint simplicity to its grown-up wearer.

Really it isn't so much what they are wearing this year that counts as what they are not wearing. In other words, you've simply got to take off more than you put on, if you would be in style these evenings.

You might, with perfect impunity, fox trot from the Turkish bath to the ball room without a bit of hesitation, for some of the smartest evening gowns fold about the waist and end abruptly just above the bust in the best manner of a bath sheet, as jauntily affected by steam room devotees.

Even straps of pearls or brilliants are becoming looked upon as superfluous and a bit of whalebone up the front, back and under each arm is all that keeps these less-than-bodice-more-than-girdle affairs above the danger line.

In a recent Broadway production called "Experience," Youth asks Fashion, who is attired in one of those nothing-above-the-waistline confections, to dance with him.

"I am afraid to," says Fashion, "for fear my dress might fall off."

"I am relieved," responds Youth, "for I thought it had already."
