

Prospectus Is Out Regarding Timber

(Herald Special Service)
 PORTLAND, Jan. 27.—According to the district forester, Portland, the forest service is now advertising the largest body of timber has yet been put on sale in Oregon. It embraces 332 million feet of timber, most of which is yellow pine of good quality. It lies in blocks, one near the shores of Klamath Bay on Klamath lake, and another just east of the Crater National park, and both within the National forest.

The printed illustration prospectus has just been issued by the district forester regarding this timber, and gives detailed information in regard to location, amount of timber, logging conditions, investment necessary, terms of sale, and includes a copy of the agreement which will be entered into with the purchaser of the timber. This prospectus is being distributed among those who are interested in the purchase of National forest stumpage.

The minimum price at which bids will be accepted is $3.25 per thousand on one block, and $3.60 per thousand on the other block for the yellow pine, sugar pine, lodgepole pine and western white pine, and fifty cents per thousand for the species of secondary importance.

German Soldiers Breaking Ice on Angerapp River

This is war in the winter where the thermometer is far below zero. The photograph shows German soldiers breaking the ice of the Angerapp river in East Prussia, near Kisteln, to keep the Russians from crossing on it. At one of the falls of the river there had been a jam of ice which would have made it possible for them to take their cannon and cavalry across when they came up in the face of the approaching Russians. The Germans stopped long enough to break the ice. It would take a day or more to freeze sufficiently for the Russians to cross and then the Germans could retreat to a safe distance.

Engaged Sister Is Given Badge of the Legion

By Frederick Palmer
 Staff correspondent representing the United Press and other American press associations at the front by invitation of the French government.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Others may interview kings and presidents, but I am at being the first American to interview Sister Julia—Boeur—who is more interesting than all such celebrities.

She is a sturdy woman of 60 is a native of France. President Poincaré and a distinguished company of officers went to Gerbevillers, a town in the Vosges near the front, where she spent her life, and decorated her with the Cross of the Legion of Honor. No town in Belgium is such a wreck as is Gerbevillers. Julia and her four sisters remained in the town during the shell fire and a conflagration during French and German shelling.

She is not wearing her decoration because she said: "This is my working dress. It is so much work to put it on my arm, so I keep the decoration in my bureau drawer. When someone brought it to me, I could not believe that such a little man would be the president, until they told me that he really was."

Another man, Monsieur Desobry, was with M. Poincaré. He is the president of something or other in Belgium.

She referred to the president of the French senate. If it is suggested that a great ado would be made when she goes to Paris, she shakes her head and says:

"My place is not making tours in Belgium, but in my beloved Gerbevillers, which has been rebuilt, caring for the women and children."

In reply to those who extol her conduct, Sister Julia invariably says: "I only did the Lord's work, when the time came for me to do it. Why should the president make an ado over that?"

NOTE — Frederick Palmer was selected by the American press associations to represent the United States with the British army. He is now at the front by invitation of the French government. He is the second American who has been allowed to go to the front since the war began. The first was William Phillip Simms, of the United Press, who was designated last fall and travelled over the whole French front and interviewed Gen. Joffre.

A LITTLE SPORTING GOSSIP

By Hal Sheridan
 UNITED PRESS SERVICE
 NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—The nearer the time for the swinging open of the gates approaches, the more it looks like Boston will make a family party of the 1915 world's championship series. This isn't a forecast, but one of the surmises most generally surmised when scribblers get together.

The sad part about it from the magnate's viewpoint, is the apparent fact that the races in the two major leagues may not be hot enough to arouse interest and coin. The team that can beat the Braves out of the pennant hasn't put itself together on paper thus far, and on their performances toward the tail-end of the 1914 season the Red Sox are being generally picked to cop the American league pennant this year.

McGraw's admission that the Giants will look about the same as in 1914, plus Hans Lobert, and with probably a slightly weaker hurling staff, arouses no pennant hopes here. The Chicago Cubs may work wonders for their new pilot, Roger Bresnahan, and the Cardinals may stir up trouble despite Federal raids, but it looks like smooth waters for Mr. Stallings.

Over in the Johnson organization, the dope isn't so certain. The disintegration of the Athletics causes the experience to throw the Mackmen out of consideration at the start. Walter Johnson having flopped back, the Washington team should make a strong bid to Chicago, under a radical managerial shake-up, but with Eddie Collins doing turns at second, is one of the unknowns and possible quantities to be reckoned with in the pennant hunt. But the argument seems to favor Boston again.

Various reports are coming from Cambridge with reference to Charles Brickley, Harvard gridiron star, who was said to have decided to coach one of the several middle western schools that bid for his services. One story has it that Brickley will assist in the coaching at Harvard next fall.

Some New Marts Found for Oregon Box Shooks

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, Jan. 27.—"A market in several places for box shooks has been discovered through the survey made for this purpose by the school of commerce of the state university, and now the Panama canal is open, there is no doubt that the northwest will be able to secure a large portion of this trade."

This news for the lumber industry is given out by Prof. H. B. Miller, director of the University of Oregon school of commerce and head of the industrial survey, began by that school last year. A world survey of the box shook situation has almost been completed, and the results are being handled over to the Northwest Association of Box Manufacturers for its use. Many countries, of course, report no market or a very limited market.

"The investigation determines the complete quantity of box shooks imported into each consular district, the uses to which the boxes are put, the kind of material from which they are made, the countries from which they are imported, and details of sizes and cost. The manufacturer is thus able to see at a glance whether the field is inviting to him," said Mr. Miller, who was formerly consul-general from the United States to China, and understands the art of getting information through all consular agencies.

The department of industrial survey of the school of commerce, is hunting markets for other products that Oregon is prepared to export in large quantities, especially in South American countries.

Manufacturers or other persons desiring the market information gathered by the survey may have it by writing H. B. Miller, University of Oregon, Eugene, Oregon.
