Enough to make it well worth while to invest in one of our stylish Overcoats or classy Balmacaans. We have made an awful "thaw" in cold weather prices. Spring is coming--so are spring goods--and we must make room.

Many Plans Are Outlined at Meet

 He argued that the farmers furnish the food that nourishes the game, and that they are entitled to some of its benefits.
 Each of the other classes represented also sought the same protection of game. But each aimed to gain it in a different manner.
 The committee has before it two senate bills and four House bills, which cover every angle of the fish and game subject.
 In a general way, nearly all of the speakers last night talked of the Schuebel bill, providing for the abolishment of the fish and game commission as now constituted, and for the appointment of a master fish warden and master game warden by the governor. The bill is still in the House.

Kucera Case Goes to the Jury Today

Taking testimony in the trial of Charles Kucera, charged with failure to provide for his family was finished today, arguments were made, and at 3:15 this afternoon, the "twelve good men and true" fled into the jury room to deliberate and arrive at a verdict.
 During the trial there were quite a number of witnesses introduced, and there was much testimony regarding the life of the Kucera family in Texas, where they lived in various mining camps before coming to Klamath county and settling at Mallin.
 As nearly all of the witnesses were Bohemians, the services of an interpreter was required during the trial.

Ida M. Tarbell, the First Trust Buster

Ida M. Tarbell, whose investigation into the history of the Standard Oil company was the first comprehensive work in trust busting, was an important witness before the United States Industrial Relations Commission in New York.
 But the most interesting part of her testimony was in connection with woman suffrage, developed by questions from the only woman member of the Commission—Mrs. J. Borden Harriman.
 "To what extent do woman share the burdens of men in industry?" asked Mrs. Harriman.
 "Wages are lower for woman because they lack experience. They are thrown into factories untrained and they are not as stable a quantity as men. Their work is of a lower grade," Miss Tarbell answered.
 "I do not like to see women get mixed up in politics," promptly stated Miss Tarbell when Mrs. Harriman inquired what suffrage was accomplishing for bettering conditions for working women.
 "It isn't men who are keeping suffrage away from women. The women are keeping suffrage away from themselves," the witness added, to the amusement of the audience.
 "Is suffrage minimizing vice conditions in industrial fields?" Mrs. Harriman persevered.
 "I don't think suffrage has had a fair test in that," was the opinion of Miss Tarbell. "More has been done in that direction, I think, in states where there is no suffrage."
