Hundreds of Agencies Handle Mail Of the Panama-Pacific Exposition

In San Francisco and in many other cities throughout the United States scores of women and men are busily handling the tons upon tons of mail concerning the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. This photograph is one of many that could be taken at any time of the day and show a special catch of literature being sent out by the Union Pacific Railroad company on a special call for descriptive literature on the sensational features of the great exposition.

Scene From "The Spoilers"

Rex Beach's great story of Alaskan life, is the offering in pictures, which will be presented at the Star theater tonight and tomorrow.

William Farnum and a wonderful cast, give a most remarkable portrayal of the many famous characters.

In the matter of action "The Spoilers" is most momentous. It is doubly significant that both the National Board of Censors and the Chicago Local Board, which is very exacting, saw the reflex of nature so admirably pictured that it passed all these big events as worthy of saving, as showing the very atmosphere of the rugged life in the conquest of a new country where conditions are primitive, and the situations altogether unusual. It would appear that the ancient aphorism, "neither God nor law existed north of 63," had been tried out and banished, for this work was reformative, and led to the establishment of law and order, the recognition of the powers in civilization which bow to divinity.
