UNIVERSITY MEN MAY VISIT LAVA BEDS THIS YEAR

BILL HURN TAKES UP THE MATTER WITH THEM

Trip of Geologists, Already Arranged, to Visit Crater Lake, May Also Be Extended so as to Include a tour of the Great Volcanic Region Where Captain Jack and His Men Held Troops Off.

There is a possibility that the Modoc Lava Beds may be visited this summer by a delegation of instructors and students from the University of Oregon. These people will visit Crater Lake this summer, and the matter of coming on to the Lava Beds was suggested to Warren Smith of the department of geology by William C. Hurn. In reply Hurn has received the following letter:

"I was very glad to receive your letter of April 13th, with the samples from the lava beds, for which I thank you very much. I am interested in what you say about the lava beds, and Professor Sweetser and I hope to be able to bring the class down there after we get through the Crater Lake trip. This, of course, will depend on the time at our disposal. I expect anyway to go out by way of Klamath Falls, and shall certainly call on you when I reach that point. We shall let you know as soon as we know how many there will be in the party, as to whether we can take on the additional trip to the lava beds. I would very much like the class to see those formations there, both from the geological and the historical standpoint."

Brewed vs. Distilled Liquor Will Be Issue After the War

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3.—The presentation by a German brewery of 3,000 bottles of beer to the wounded in the Austro-Hungarian hospital at Sarajevo, Bosnia, has reopened the discussion of the effects of alcoholic beverages on the fighting man of the firing line. The German government's attitude is shown by its shipment of the consignment of beer, duty free.

In the rush following the outbreak of hostilities, Russia attempted to solve the question by abolishing the manufacture and sale of vodka; France forbade the absinthe traffic; Germany closed all railway bars; and Lord Kitchener announced that Tommy Atkins would not be permitted to indulge in intoxicating liquors.

But—Upon mature deliberation by the German physicians and scientists, the ban against beer has been lifted completely. The German diet adopted a resolution relieving from taxes or duty articles intended for troops or the Red Cross societies, and arrangements were made to refund to brewers the tax paid by them on beer they donated to the soldiers.

not beer? Beer is not used by the German soldier as an intoxicant."

In France, the proprietors of cafes who agree not to sell spirituous liquors have been exempted from license dues, but beer and wine are classed as hygienic drinks and come under the exempt clause. The minister of war, as compensation for the destruction of the absinthe traffic, issued orders for the increasing of the daily wine ration of the soldiers from one-third to one-half of a liter.

In the House of Commons in London, the under secretary of state was bombarded with questions concerning the alleged shipment of hundreds of thousands of gallons of rum to the English soldiers in France.

The under secretary of state replied that considerable quantities of rum had been sent to the troops but that the men could take it or leave it as they wished. The army physicians considered it necessary that soldiers exposed to the cold in the trenches should have some stimulant available.

GERMANY IS ELATED

Experts say that this is the most important success in the last two months of fighting. They assert that Russia must soon abandon her campaign to invade Hungary through the Carpathians.

ATHENS, May 4.—The bombardment of the Dardanelles was renewed yesterday. The allies are making a vigorous attack, and the Grand Duchess Queen Elizabeth and Warships are participating in the engagement.

The battleships are raking the forts from the Aegean Sea and the Gulf of Saros. The smaller ships have penetrated the straits, and are shelling the positions from there.

There are four British battleships pounding away at the Turkish forts. The response is feeble. Troops were landed yesterday at Egevous, thirty-five miles south of Smyrna.

In one of these letters, Barnes complained that Platt was preventing him from "securing anything in the printing line, and depriving me of my legitimate patronage." He asked Platt to give his newspaper the contract to furnish the stationery and other apparatus for the New York assembly.
