"In the spring a livelier iris Changes on the burnished dove; In the spring a young man's fancy Lightly turns to thoughts of love." We assume that the immortal Tenyson was right in the above quotation, but we are of the opinion that many a young man's thoughts of love fell to zero on May 1st, if a change in temperature is responsible for changes.

A. Kalina, the prosperous merchant of Malin, advises us that he will take the pupils of the Shasta View school to Klamath Falls at the close of the term, May 15th.

An excellent program was given by the Shasta View school recently. It was praised very highly on account of its being unique. ### "Bloody Angle" of the Great Battle in Flanders

This map shows "The Bloody Angle" of the great battle now raging in Flanders. While the world has been looking on and wondering when the heavy spring fighting was to begin, the troops have been at it, with the result that in this small space thousands have been killed. For six days the terrible fight has raged. The angle covers the territory in which the Germans were defeated last fall when they drove toward Calais. The return of the German attack takes place further to the north than the points where their heaviest attacks of last October fell. Then they attacked from Zantvoorde through Gheluvelt, to Zonnebeke. The present German attack was apparently anticipated by the unexpected British assault on Hill No. 60, further south (B). Although only a small gain in territory, this success was most important, because of the hill's domination of the surrounding territory. The real German attack came Thursday, April 23, on the north side of the salient shown by a black line. This onslaught, preceded by the use of gas bombs, carried them in some places two miles into the allies' lines and across the Yser canal, as shown by the slightly shaded area (A). It may be noted that in these three days' fighting the Germans have reduced the area of the allies' salient by fully a third, and they are now in a position to cover the entire remainder by artillery fire. Reports are persistent, though unverified, that Field Marshal von Hindenburg now commands the German troops in Flanders, with 500,000 men at his disposal.

TODAY'S ODDDEST STORY
United Press Service.
DENVER, Colo., May 4.—The county jailer is having his troubles with Tse-Ne-Gat, hero of the Plute uprising, awaiting trial here on a charge of murdering a Mexican sheepherder a year ago.
A bed is a new experience for Tse-Ne-Gat, whose correct name by the way is Tsequit. He prefers to sleep on the cement floor rolled up in an Indian blanket, because the bed "bucked."
"Me have bad dream. Bed him buck like cowboy's horse. Tsequit him hit floor. Heap sore," is how the Indian describes his experience.
Deputy Warden Murphy supplied him with linament and explained its use, but the Indian carefully placed it in his cell for a charm to keep the bed from bucking.
