QUALITY, NOT QUANTITY, IN TOWN GROWTH

IN THESE DAYS of rapid development by towns and cities, with extensive advertisement of resources, etc., people are prone to neglect such salient features as town cleanliness, sanitation and health in their efforts to put before the world the advantages from a manufacturing, commercial or other attractive standpoint of the home town. But if dairies, slaughter houses, etc., are not in the best condition, if too little attention is given the garbage disposal, if health is menaced by neglect to keep the town clean, the other boasting work will by no means be as effective as desired.

The following from a Paula, Kansas, newspaper, giving a resume of an address delivered before the Mother's Club there by A. C. Trigg of Kansas City, is a sermon that any town, great or small, can well consider seriously:

Mr. Trigg is a member of the Kansas City Star staff, and from that we know, of course, that he believes in the greater city just as the rest of us do. But he draws a distinction between magnitude and quality, which is something the rest of us generally fail to do. He insists that if we cannot have but one, it should be the latter; and then he maintains that magnitude of the proper order is best attained by first bringing about the conditions which make the city the best possible in which to live. Make the city right and it becomes desirable; and desirability is the stepping stone to magnitude, wealth, prosperity and all the rest.

Mr. Trigg acknowledges that his gospel is not likely to be popular with booster clubs, promotion bodies and others; but he holds that the error is with the boosters, promoters and others, and not with his view. The big population which increases realty values and is a manifestation of industrial activity is certainly to be striven for, but he argues that real progress is made only when such growth is on the basis of a clean and comfortable city. Otherwise there is always a penalty to pay in slums, disease, poverty, crime and their concomitants of public charities, poor houses, jails, police courts and the rest of our scavenging and renovating machinery created to correct evils that we might in the first place have avoided if we only had the sense.

We consider the city thriving where industry is great and active; where we can show palatial homes, beautiful parks and magnificent public buildings; and according to the standard of our practice that is thrift and progress. But the test is to show the other half—the back yard of the city—the places where the people of least revenue live; the places that develop in too rapid growth during which the business of acquiring dollars has driven nearly all else out of mind—the slums, the tenements, the resorts of vice. Every city begins without these, and there is the dawning belief that cities may grow without them and with a net result in substantial progress far in excess of that now realized.

Scattered Shots

JUST STOP AND THINK what a thousand men, working on the roads of the city and county, can accomplish in one day. That day will be May 30th, designated by the governor as "Good Roads Day" all over the state. Be sure to turn out at that time.

ALSO STOP AND ponder over the fact that whenever the storm rages outside and carries out bridges, etc., or kills off the fruit and vegetable crops, or puts the telephone and telegraph on the blink, Klamath is never hard hit like other towns. Perhaps this is the answer to "Why is Klamath?"

BUT TO BE PREPARED, do your Christmas shopping early.
