Wins Trap Shooting Championship With Total of 192 Targets

George C. Lyon is now the trap shooting champion of America, having won the title at the tournament held at Travers Island, New York. He made a total of 192 targets from a possible score of 200. That is the best score in the past ten years during which the competition has been held. R. L. Spotts, the old champion, failed to show form. He made only 183 targets, and was fifteenth in the competition.

Lyon was hard pressed for the crown throughout the competition. In spite of the hard pace he was setting, A. L. Chamberlin of Bridgeport, A. E. Conley of Buffalo, Newcomb of Philadelphia, an ex-champion, and E. A. Randall of Portland, Me., kept right after him. When the 150 mark was reached Conley was in the lead with but one target, but on the next string Lyon picked up and had a score of 168, three better than his nearest competitor. Chamberlin managed to pull out ahead of the others in the last string, and finished second to Lyon, only two birds behind him. The field was made up of 143 gunners.

to take up intensive farming in the Willamette Valley. The new man is O. I. Gregg, who is now a resident of Grants Pass.

Mr. Gregg is a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural College. After finishing there, he taught for four years in the college, resigning to come West and take up horticulture near Grants Pass. He recently sold his orchard, and decided to again take up teaching.

Gregg is also park superintendent of Grants Pass at the present time. He comes highly recommended as a successful farmer and teacher.

Moving Pictures

Today is regular Paramount day at the Star theater, but owing to the lack of service from the south, "The Typhoon," which was scheduled for today and tomorrow, did not arrive. However, the management was very fortunate in receiving a fine program from Portland, which will be presented tonight only. The feature of the program is the three-part Vitagraph production, "The Reward of Thrift." This picture has been arranged, in co-operation with the saving bank section of the American Bankers' Association, and an all-star cast is seen in this most worthy picture.

A Hearst Selig News Pictorial and an Edison comedy completes today's five reel program. The management has arranged with the Seattle Paramount office for a fine Famous Players offering, which will be presented tomorrow. "The Dancing Girl" is the title of the picture. It is one of the latest releases of the Paramount company, and receives fine comment from the critics. It is of a dramatic nature, and is in five parts.

Atlantic City has a "Jitney bus" company which will cater exclusively to the trade of women, and will have female chauffeurs.

Ex-Middleweight Among Guests at Millionaire Wedding

Mr. "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien

Mrs. Cordelia Biddle Duke
Mrs. O'Brien
Mr. Angler B. Duke

When this photograph of "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien, former middleweight, among the guests at the millionaire wedding of Angler B. Duke of New York and Miss Cordelia Biddle of Philadelphia, was shown to James J. Corbett, "Gentleman Jim," who for years was known as the most polished gentleman in the ring, he sniffed. "Gentleman Jim" had seen in his time some very high company. But never in all his life, from bank clerk to heavyweight champion, and later as uplifter of the stage, had he attended a wedding where the father of the groom possessed so many millions he could not count his fortune within a million dollars and swear to its accuracy. Never in his great career had he been among guests at a wedding where the bride was of a family which stood at the very apex of American society.

But "Philadelphia Jack," friend of the father of the bride, was there when the wedding took place in Philadelphia the other day. Nor was he the only notable of the ring there. Lew Bailey, famous because he brought out Jack Blackburn, the wonderful welterweight negro fighter, was there with all his diamonds—Lew wears more costly, at least bigger, diamonds than any millionaire in Philadelphia.

Among the guests at the wedding were also Henry W. Taft, brother of the former president of the United States, and Mrs. Taft; Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, the greatest railroad company on earth, and several members of the Cassatt family of Philadelphia, relatives of the late Alexander Cassatt, who was president of the Pennsylvania. There was also the cream, the very cream, of Philadelphia society, and much of the cream of New York society.

"Tony" Biddle, father of the bride, has long been a friend of "Philadelphia Jack." Jack taught him to box, and under the tutelage of Jack he became a very proficient boxer, the champion of Philadelphia society. Such association with a fighter might have hurt the standing of other than a Biddle in Philadelphia, but it didn't hurt "Tony's" standing. His family was fixed in the solid rock of generations of social supremacy. The association simply lifted "Philadelphia Jack" to social heights heretofore undreamed of by a gentleman with such wonderful "tin ears" as he possesses. The power of the Biddles in Philadelphia was so great that Jack was lifted despite his "tin ears." In fact, society, most of which knows little about these accidents of the ring, found Jack's "tin ears" the cutest things in its midst. Jack himself, like any clever pugilist, was properly ashamed of the ears. "Gentleman Jim" never had a tin ear, and that was one reason why he sniffed when he heard of Gentleman Jack's appearance at the greatest wedding Philadelphia has known in a generation. A tin ear is a mark of inferiority. Clever boxers don't let their opponents smash them on the ears. But how could Philadelphia society know that? It didn't, and, it is said, the ladies often fingered Jack's ears to find out if they really contained tin.
