Shepherd Tells of the Preparations to Alay Suffering in Britain's Army

By WM. G. SHEPHERD

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

(Copyright, 1915, by United Press. Copyright in Great Britain)

HEADQUARTERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY, Northern France, April 29.—By mail to New York.—To keep the army healthy is the first gigantic task of the royal army medical corps in the British fighting zone, but to take care of the soldiers after they are wounded is a task somewhat more spectacular than the steady grind of scientific sanitation. In the Carpathian in Galicia last winter I saw huge bodies of Austrian soldiers marching toward the battle that was raging near Przemyśl. Another tattered army was coming from the battle field; it was made up of groups of wounded and sick men who struggled along, dragging their broken bodies as best they could, back to where the shells were not flying; back to what?

Would they find the white beds and gentle nurses and rest and health again? The chances were against them. Some of them had walked twenty miles, and had more miles to go. They were a sight to make a man sick at heart, and yet the Austrian soldiers, marching forward to battle, saw them as well as I did; raw what it meant to be wounded and sick. Could you blame an Austrian soldier for losing heart before a battle? There may have been plenty of gallant officers to lead them into slaughter, but there was no one to take them out of it.

The R. A. M. C. of the British army has produced entirely different conditions at this front. Sir John French's army is fighting under conditions as civilized as human war will permit. Behind the line the R. A. M. C. has established its chain of hospitals; during a battle it fights death as desperately as the soldiers themselves are fighting the enemy.

"Ammunition, ammunition, always more ammunition," is the cry of the great British field marshal.

"Speed, speed, always more speed," is the cry of the R. A. M. C.

However wildly and fiercely a battle may be raging, there is always the cool, steady system of the R. A. M. C. in its midst. The R. A. M. C. men knew in advance, perhaps, that the battle was going to be fought. They made their plans accordingly. Let us begin at the battle line. Here there are men with stretchers, and men with "first aid" packages. They have been placed here by the R. A. M. C. awaiting the battle.

Behind the battle line, but not far away, in the shelter of a hill if possible, or in a grove, will be a field dressing station. R. A. M. C. doctors will be here. As soon as the stretcher men bring in the wounded, the field dressing station doctors begin their task. They must work like lightning if the battle is a hard one; they must diagnose in flashes. Their work is to care for men who will die immediately from loss of blood if an artery is cut, or to give the benediction of the hypodermic needle to men whose pains are too great to be endured.

If a man is not suffering too greatly and if his wound does not need immediate attention he is passed along. This field dressing station may be in a tent or a house, or even in the open. The automobile ambulances would be much better, but battles are not always fought along good roads; if it is night the automobile ambulances cannot move without lights that might be seen by the enemy, while the faithful horses pick their way, silently, in the blackest darkness, and prove, incidentally, that the day of the horse is not finished in war. From the field dressing station the horse ambulances carry their brave loads back to a spot where the automobile ambulances are waiting. Such a spot is called by the R. A. M. C. a "motor ambulance rendezvous." From other directions one may see other horse ambulances coming up. Other field dressing stations on other points of the fighting line are emptying their wounded into this center. And behind the fighting line, in such a battle as "the second battle of Ypres," which has just been fought by General French's troops, there may be a dozen of these great motor ambulance parks, with horse ambulance routes radiating from them to the firing line, like the ribs of a fan.

Here, at the ambulance park is where you begin to get the thrill of the Red Cross work. These automobiles were, perhaps, Red Cross donations. The wounded are transferred to the automobiles. R. A. M. C. doctors move about in the busy scene, giving opiates when they are necessary, adjusting bandages, caring for a man who may need instant care to save his life. The automobiles dash off at the highest speed permitted by the condition of the roads. Nothing, unless it be artillery or ammunition coming up to the front, must block them; if possible, special roads were selected for them before the battle began, and even soldier policemen, as in the battle of Neuve Chapelle, may be keeping these R. A. M. C. roads clear of all other traffic.

The automobiles run to some town where there is a railroad station; in this town there will be a big building used as a resting place for the wounded. It is technically known as a "casualty clearing station," and is not rated as a hospital proper. There may be several of these great casualty stations behind the battle line, where doctors and nurses have been waiting for the wounded to arrive. In the casualty clearing station many doctors are at work in a heavy battle. They dress wounds thoroughly; they set broken limbs; they have operating tables and all the instruments that a surgeon might have in a great London or New York hospital. They are prepared to handle any sort of a case. Here you begin to see even more of the Red Cross work. White gowned army nursing service nurses will be moving about on errands of mercy. Slippers, bandages, blankets, a thousand little comforts that come from Red Cross sources, show you that we are leaving the scientific efficiency of the battle line, and are moving back toward civilization, where kindness and sympathy await the man who was wounded while fighting for his country.

There are hospital trains waiting in this town. Some of the cars may have been donated by the Red Cross, as were many of the automobiles. In the trains there are other army nurses, and every possible comfort. I have seen even flowers. Woman's touch and her kindness begins to be felt. It is like heaven for a soldier who has done his duty and been wounded to fall back on his white pillow in a hospital train and start for home.

Then there's the run of the train back to some great city where splendid hospitals and comfort, and health may be found. The R. A. M. C. has fought for the lives of these men every inch of the way. In the same spirit that a great surgeon may, by sparing no pains, try to rescue a man from the very brink of death, so does the R. A. M. C. go to the very limit of effort. For instance, on the canals there are slow-moving, steady-going canal boats for the wounded soldier who might be killed by the jostle of a train, or whose condition is so serious that, even while he is traveling he must have all the care that he would receive in a great hospital. There's hope for him in these boats. They will wend their slow, steady way to the English Channel and the huge hospital ships which carry the wounded soldiers back to old England.

Your money which you put into the Red Cross fund buys the comforts which aids the tools of the R. A. M. C. But the R. A. M. C. does the work. The R. A. M. C. is scientific and practical. The Red Cross adds the comforts that gentleness and kindness have taken so many centuries to build into our civilization.

He Saved Leo Frank

Governor John Marshall Slaton of Georgia

When Governor John Marshall Slaton of Georgia commuted the sentence of Leo M. Frank to life imprisonment, he issued a statement in which he said it meant he must live in obscurity the rest of his days. He said:

"Feeling as I do about this case, I would be a murderer if I allowed this man to hang. It means that I must live in obscurity the rest of my days, but I would rather be plowing in a field than to feel for the rest of my life that I had that man's blood on my hands."

Governor Slaton is 49 years of age. He entered politics as a member of the Georgia house of representatives in 1896, and remained until 1909. He was speaker for four years. He was in the Georgia senate for four years, and became acting governor when Hoke Smith was elected to the United States senate. In October, 1912, he was elected governor of Georgia, to serve till June 30 of this year.

STOP CATARRH! OPEN NOSTRILS AND HEAD

Says Cream Applied in Nostriils Relieves Head-Colds at Once.

Count fifty! Your cold in head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffling, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; no struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed up and miserable. Relief is sure. (Paid Advertisement)

RECIPE TO CLEAR "TIZ" FOR SORE, A PIMPLY SKIN TIRED FEET--AH!

PIMPLES ARE IMPURITIES SEEKING AN OUTLET THROUGH THE SKIN PORES

Pimples, sores and boils usually result from toxins, poisons and impurities which are generated in the bowels and then absorbed into the blood through the very ducts which should absorb only nourishment to sustain the body.

It is the function of the kidneys to filter impurities from the blood and cast them out in the form of urine, but in many instances the bowels create more toxins and impurities than the kidneys can eliminate, then the blood uses the skin pores as the next best means of getting rid of these impurities which often break out all over the skin in the form of pimples.

The surest way to clear the skin of these eruptions, says a noted authority, is to get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of hot water each morning before breakfast for one week. This will prevent the formation of toxins in the bowels. It also stimulates the kidneys to normal activity, thus coaxing them to filter the blood of impurities and clearing the skin of pimples.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent drink which usually makes pimples disappear; cleanses the blood and is excellent for the kidneys as well.
