—and I'll Be Laid Up Several Weeks Longer

WHY, a brick fell from the third floor of a new building and connected with my head. In a hospital for a long time with a cracked skull, fever, delirious, and heaven knows what all.

But every month, regular as clockwork, along came a check for $200 from the ÆTNA. You see, my ÆTNA ACCIDENT POLICY calls for $50 weekly while totally disabled, $25 a week while partly out of commission, and also surgeon's fees or hospital bills. Makes it hard for me, eh? Man, I'm an optimist of the purest ray serene.

What did the policy cost? If I told you how little, you'd say I'm still raving. Come up tonight and I'll tell you. So long!

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

"Thy Birthright"

By Rev. E. C. Richards, Pastor Grace M. E. Church

"And he sold his birthright unto Jacob." Genesis 25:33.

Contrasts in Character—

Two entirely distinct and sinful natures are here presented in the persons of Jacob and Esau. Esau is a type of the intellectually sinful man. Esau was lithe and strong, a hunter, a man of the earth. His garments smelled of the soil. His step had the spring begotten of the fields and woods and streams and hills, and the fresh air. He was just the man with whom to take a hunting trip. Vivacious, emotional, subject to tears and laughter, he was equally at home under the burning sun or the weeping clouds. Jacob was crafty, grasping, cautious, desiring power and wealth. Much of his time was spent in studying human nature. He placed Jacob first of all men. He would harbor revenge, but would hold it down for personal gain. He would sacrifice a friend for himself every time. He knew Esau perfectly. He had studied him for years. Esau had inherited his susceptibility to animal desires from his father Isaac, while his energy came from Rebekah. Jacob got his keenness and dishonesty from Rebekah, while his quietness came from Isaac.

Esau—

To look at Esau would be to admire him. He scintillated with life, animal life. But this was his fatality, for it stood greater than a controlling mind. He comes in from the hunting hungry, faint and weary. He sees red pottage, prepared in advance for this special temptation. His nostrils are touched by its odor, his eyes by its color. He cries, "Feed me with that same red." Jacob is ready. Like all greedy sin he cries at the psychological moment, "Sell me this day thy birthright." There is a struggle in the mind of Esau, but it is only for a moment. Accustomed to yield the mental to the physical, he follows habit. Life is like a lampwick, porous. It absorbs it increasingly and burns its own destruction. At first afraid of sin, we then endure and finally embrace. Then, Esau-like, we think we shall die unless we yield to this appetite. Consequences are thrown to the winds. Sin leads up to the point of greatest weakness, then compels us to swear allegiance. Then, feeding us upon pottage and lentils, sin retreats, grinning and laughing at the ruin he has wrought.

Jacob:—

Jacob's name like his nature, meant "supplanter." He was following a natural bent to take another's goods and place. Treacherous, self-seeking, heartless, cold blooded, calculating, he held all fleshly appetites in check to accomplish one supreme purpose at the advantage of a brother's weakness. He was like Cassius in Julius Caesar: "Yon Cassius hath a lean and hungry look; he thinks too much; such men are dangerous."

Seldom he smiles, and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mocked himself, and scorned his spirit
That could be moved to smile at anything."

Losses:—

Esau's chagrin came in early life, Jacob's came late. Esau lost a kingship and priesthood. He lost power and fame and contentment. He lost his inherited right because he failed to make it by his actual conquest and use. He despised the most precious thing, a character governed by high motives. Jacob gained leadership and power and wealth, but was plunged into gloom and dread, and after fighting a great battle with himself he was compelled to humble himself to the very man whom he had wronged. Both sold their birthrights and enacted a tragedy in the history of men. We are told that Esau later repented and found himself too late to regain that which he had lost. Oh, heart, seek only that which is thine own, but prize it highly. May it never be said of thee:

"We barter life for pottage; sell true bliss
For wealth or power, for pleasure or renown;
Thus, Esau-like, our Father's blessings miss,
Then wash with fruitless tears our faded crown."

Causes Row in Baseball

JOHNNY EVERS

Little Johnny Evers, who has caused much trouble in baseball—usually to the opposing clubs— has stirred a row among the officials of the National League by his remarks during a game in Boston the other day.

Evers, taking exception to a decision by Rigler, who declared Bob Bescher safe at the plate on a close play, was quoted in a newspaper as having shouted:

"They're trying to get the crowds out; they've ordered a close race; leave them alone, boys; they're only following instructions."

Evers later expressed indignation because his remarks had been interpreted as a claim that the National League race was "fixed." He said:

"I claim no such thing. I've been in baseball long enough to know better. To be sure, I might have said anything on the ball field. When an umpire hands you one like Rigler did at the home plate what you say will invariably be the result of hard feeling at the time.

"You're out there fighting, and anything you can get away with goes. Nobody living could fix a race like the one in the National League just now. It's the greatest ever, and we all have a chance."

George Stallings said: "There is absolutely no truth in the story that Captain Evers said that the National League race was "fixed."
