

San Francisco Fight on
THEFTON, N. J., Sept. 21.—This city today began a death struggle between the public utility commission and the street railway forces, to decide whether the latter has the right to discontinue selling strip tickets at the rate of six for a quarter.

Ranges

We have some ranges that we think will appeal to those wanting a neat, modern, fully equipped home range. They are well built, and of good material, and stand on a sanitary base, which gives them a very attractive appearance. The greatest feature of these ranges is the price—$22.50. VINGEL & SON, Cor. 4th and Klamath

THINGS WORTH WHILE

THERE are other things really worth while besides simply the continuous chase of the dollar. The average man takes life too seriously, and permits his thoughts and efforts for the advancement of his selfish interests to absorb too much of his attention, to the exclusion of the performance of his duty to society and the world about him.

Money is a mighty good thing, and business success is greatly to be desired, but the attainment of these does not necessarily mean the sacrifice of those things which are really worth while in life.

It is man's duty to help make this old world a little more pleasant to those others who are occupying it with him, and who may not be so fortunate and may have less to be joyful over. It is his duty not only to those about him, but it is his duty to himself. Many men lose half the pleasure of life through their own selfishness. A man may expect to receive in proportion as he gives. A man that is able to impart pleasure and cheerfulness to others will be well repaid. Just try it. You may be the busiest man in town, but it will pay you to take time to smile.

THE PROPER SPIRIT

MANY of the business men and others of Klamath Falls are leaving their stores and employment today in order to mingle with the people of the Merrill country, and share with them the feeling of pride in the results of their efforts in agriculture and other lines, which are displayed at their district fair.

Each year a better feeling is being built up between the farming section of the county and the county seat. This is only the natural result of closer association. The people are beginning to realize that they are all partners in this great Klamath country, and that on the development and prosperity of the entire county depends their own individual success.

The spirit being shown today by the people of Klamath Falls is sure to result in a better understanding between the country and the city, which means more prosperity for all.

Scattered Shots

THE ROBIANS are threatened again; this time in their retreat from Wile. Last time it was from Warsaw. One of these times the Slav hordes are going to get wherever they are going, and then perhaps we shall see the reason for this retreat.

A LITTLE PRIEST died on the battlefield, cheering his ferried followers with thoughts of Kingdom-Come. Now perhaps from his own high place his eyes can pierce the high-angled scheme of it all, while before he could only follow the bidding of his heart to urge the soldiers into the battle hell.

THE KLAMATH MOVIES are billed for tomorrow night, and the populace is expected to turn out to take a good squint at themselves.

RATHER QUIET along the Men border yesterday. Well, they've got to stop and consider occasionally to decide whom they want to be president.

Italian Priest Cheers Armies in Battle Hell

By ALICE ROBEY
 (United Press Staff Correspondent)

ROME, Aug. 25.—(By mail)—"The Singing Chaplain of Kingdom-Come," they called him up in the blood-drenched valley of the Isonzo. For when Austrian bullets were shrieking past and the shrapnel was tearing human lives into shreds, and bombs were making a writhing hell of that mountain paradise, the little Chaplain of Castellano was calling to the men who were fighting to think of the Greater Kingdom of Italy, and to the men who were falling to the think of the still Greater Kingdom of Come.

In between battles the little priest from Castellano, who was one of the first to offer his services as an army chaplain, used to sing as the bersaglieri and the other soldiers had never heard singing. Sometimes his eyes grew dim as he thought of his parish in Castellano and his staging school founded in honor of the great vatican music master, Periso, where he taught the boys of Castellano to sing the beautiful church music.

Pietro Giannuzzi, lieutenant chaplain, left behind him one of the accomplished ambitions of his life, a real singing school, when he marched away for the war. But when he saw the stars upon his arm he said he had done a bigger thing, he had seen a great bond woven between the country he loved and the church he worshipped. Giannuzzi was one of those brave priests who had suffered long when dissensions between church and state made the duty of Italian clergy obscure. When he marched to war he typified the spirit of religious Italy, bound to the church, but bound to the Patrie by blood ties.

All the soldiers loved this brave little chaplain, who was always there to give the saving rites to the soldiers who fell. The first Sunday that Giannuzzi celebrated mass on the battlefield and on "redeemed" Italian soil, before one of the portable army altars supplied to Italy by the pope, when he saw the Italian soldiers gather round worshipping the church and state in one, as he said, his prayer had been answered. Then he hurried away to help some poor fellow cross the divide into Kingdom Come.

"Don't be afraid of Austrian bullets—think of Kingdom Come," he cried, while the officers endeavored to dissuade him from taking so many chances.

But the army chaplain whose thoughts are of his country and of his religion, finds his place beside the men who are falling. And Giannuzzi was always near the front.

"They wouldn't kill a priest," gasped a young soldier from Tivoli, his lungs pierced by an Austrian bullet. The chaplain was bending over him, and the last rites of the church were being given the dying boy, when a bullet flying true and certain struck him. He died there on the battlefield with the sacred words of the church on his lips—the first Italian chaplain to fall.

is evidenced here, and many hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent in development, with little or no certainty as to the exact lay of the pool. In the meantime Arkansas City is reaping a harvest from the speculators and business from the tent colonies in every direction. That no town should start up near its border to get the business away from the oil district the Commercial Club has constructed model highways.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Brest Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Tee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teaspoon full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieves congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold. Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

Facts of Interest to the Farmer

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 21.—October, designated as "Farmers Month" at the Panama-Pacific International exposition, promises to bring together the largest and most representative gathering of agriculturists, orchardists, livestock breeders and farmers, that has ever assembled in the state. The exposition company is now planning many different sorts of entertainment, the kind that will appeal strongly to the ruralist, for each day in the month.

Fall Calves Best for Early Beef
 (By R. E. Reynolds)

Walter M. Pierce, Union county farmer and stock raiser, member of the Board of Regents of the Oregon Agricultural college, has started a practice of raising fall calves instead of spring calves with very good success. His plan of handling these calves is to have them dropped along about November. The cows are then placed in covered sheds and fed all the alfalfa hay that they will consume until the following spring. During this time the calf is so small that it will eat grass if there is any, and it also has the advantage of being kept indoors during the winter time.

About the first of April, the cow with her young calf is turned out on the mountain ranges. Here, due to the green grass, the milk flow of the cow is very much increased. The calf now being a few months old will be able to handle this increase without difficulty. The calf runs on the range until about the first of July when it is taken on new mown meadows or alfalfa or clover patches.

In this manner the calf avoids the shortage of pasture during the drier months of the summer. Also the calf is weaned at a time when the cow will dry up more quickly when put back into the mountains on the dry feed. From the alfalfa pasture or the meadows the calves are turned into the stubble fields and allowed to run there until late in the fall when they are put into lots and fed all the alfalfa hay they will eat. Most of the calves are bled sold from 12 to 15 months of age.

Forage and Soil Builders

A good deal of experimental work in legumes and other forage crops to be used as soil builders is being conducted by the Harney County Experiment Station at Burns, Oregon. Field peas and rape are being given an extensive trial as forage crops in that section and give good promise of success. These crops are grown in rows on unirrigated lands and receive cultivation. Alfalfa in cultivated rows is being experimented with on many farms and is making good when properly handled. Sweet clover is also being given a thorough trial and while it is especially designed as a soil building crop its value as forage will also be observed. Sudan grass is another crop that is being tried out by a number of farmers, although it has not during the last two years proved to be very successful.

In determining whether the dairy cows are being fed satisfactory rations for the production of butter, other things than their effect upon the quality of butter should be considered, says the O. A. C. Dairy department. Among these may be mentioned the cost of the feed, their effect upon the health of the cows, the amount of butter fat produced, and the degree of completeness and with which the butter fat is recovered from the milk. It is only when all these conditions are met in the best way available that rations are entirely satisfactory.

AN EYESIGHT TALK

I wish I could talk to you face to face and urge upon you the necessity of taking every possible care of your eyesight.

Do you know that seventy-five out of every 100 persons have defective vision, and that Eyesight Defects (if allowed to go unremedied with correctly adjusted glasses) mean defective work, irritation and dissatisfaction, headache and neurasthenia? Are you sure your eyes are perfect?

If you are not, then call today and let me make a thorough scientific examination and give you advice and help which will preserve your vision.
