TREASON TO AMERICAN INDUSTRIES

THE keen solicitude of the Department of Commerce for the welfare and prosperity of workmen in foreign countries is plainly shown in a statement issued September 23d, in which the department announces that it "has undertaken to assist in having orders placed" with Swiss manufacturers of Christmas toys. If this admission were not made on the stationery of the department it would scarcely be credited. There are several million of men and women in the United States who would be glad to make a living in the manufacture of toys. This administration not only opened our markets wide to foreign manufacturers, but now goes to considerable trouble to aid those foreign producers to get orders in this country. The American producer finds his own government in competition against him and in favor of the foreigner. If the American people want a plain case of treason to American industry they have it here—proven by official confession.

BRYAN got $1,500 for a peace talk at Boston. It's a mighty smart man who can capitalize his opposition to his own president in this way.

"NO INTERVENTION" is said to be the watchword of the new Mexican policy. Wherein does this differ from "watchful waiting?"

Scattered Shots

SHERIFF LOW'S grown-up son, the deputy, allows that one light out on Conger street ought to be taken away. He says that it's expensive to the city, and besides, after walking in darkness for so far, that one sixteen-candle power blinds a man so that he runs into things when he gets off into the darkness again.

THE BALKANS have at last tumbled into the war, and the principal reports from that rambunctious section are official dispatches from each of the states, blaming the others for "forcing them into it."

AN OLD MAN in New Jersey who has just passed the century mark, has been smoking ever since he was 18 years old. But he'll die of tobacco heart or some such dreadful malady, if he don't look out.

OLD POLAND, desolate and bleak, fair Breton's fertile land, are shambles now, in blood deth reek; a million crosses stand. In Belgium peasant heads are low, cathedrals battered down, and where the Danube's waters flow, past vineyard and old town, is battle carnage. Half the world—those lands of masters' song, have headlong in the maelstrom hurled, the ocean of old wrong.

But still our land with peace is blessed, and when small troubles fret, let them be forgotten lest the war scourge strike us yet.

FACTS FROM THE PORT

The new high school building is under construction. It contains two large rooms, and is being erected at a cost of $3,500.

Ducks are scarce this year, because the swamps are so dry and so many of them burned over. A few birds are feeding in the grain fields.

Wenatch's residence, a six-room modern structure, is now under construction. Jack Kautz is contractor.

Porter Charlton, Young American in Italy, Is Tried for Murder

By ALICE BONE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
COMO, Italy, Oct. 5.—Porter Charlton went on trial today.

From the iron cage in which the prisoner in Italy is always confined in the court room, the young American, not yet twenty-five, listened to the opening of the case. From the start it was clear that the defense would attempt to prove that he was insane when he killed with a mallet his wife of less than a month on the night of June 7, 1910, stuffed her body in a trunk, and threw it into the depths of Lake Como.

The strangeness of the crime was not lessened by the medieval cage, and the two fantastically costumed carabinieri who guarded him, with their Napoleonic hats gaily cocked and their decorated uniforms, appeared in spite of the sinister setting like opera bouffe choruses.

Charlton is an American with Italian lawyers, in an Italian court being tried by Italian methods. However, in the two years since he was taken back to Italy, he has learned the Italian language sufficiently well to be able to follow the progress of his trial.

The jury which hear the plea is an unusual one for Italy. It is made up almost entirely of professional men, and the reports of the alienists who have been watching the prisoner will not fall upon ignorant ears. There have been three reports by the alienists—all of a type familiar in America, which will be introduced at the trial. The first, for the defense, declared him insane at the time the crime was committed; the second, for the crown, declared him sane; and the third, provided by the government, left loopholes both ways.

Coming between the court and the prisoner were the visions of the penalty which may be visited upon him. The sentence for deliberate murder is life imprisonment. The first ten years of life term are spent in solitary confinement in a dark cell with only bread and water for food—a sentence which practically means death from insanity in a few years. The sentence for murder not deliberate is twenty years.

Charlton, then not twenty years of age and a clerk in a New York banking house, married Mary Scott Castle, May 12, 1910. She was twice his age, and had been well known in San Francisco and New York, and had short experience on the stage. She was of an intensely passionate and jealous nature, and when Charlton met her she was being held on bail for the shooting of William B. Craig, a broker, in the elevator of the Waldorf-Astoria. She fascinated Charlton, and the attention of the young man pleased her.

They sailed for Genoa four days after the marriage, and immediately they began a series of violent quarrels.

They went through Italy and to the shores of Como, where their quarrels were so strenuous that they were asked to leave the hotel. Then they rented the Villa Legnassi at Moltrasio, where the crime was committed.

It is said that the experience drove Charlton into periods of insanity during one of which he killed her. The details may cause part of the trial to be conducted behind closed doors. The final quarrel came late at night on June 7, and at its height Charlton, blind with rage, picked up a mallet and beat her to death. He put the body in a trunk and sank it in the lake. Then he fled. The trunk was found two days later and search was made for Charlton's body, for it was believed that he too, was the victim of a murder. He was arrested as he walked down the gangplank of the Prinzess Irene in New York harbor. He had sailed from Genoa. He confessed the crime, but his father, Judge Paul Charlton, and he fought extradition, and it was not until August, 1913, that the United States supreme court decided that he must return to Italy to stand trial. There he was lodged in an asylum for observation. Italian legal processes are slow, but the trial was finally set for August, 1914. The coming of the world war caused the first postponement, and Italy's entrance into the war caused it to be postponed again. The time he has spent in confinement will be taken into account, if Charlton is sentenced to a limited term.
