

Gasoline Steamer Goes on Rocks; But Two Saved

United Press Service
 POINT ARENA, Calif., Oct. 19.—The gasoline steamer Alliance II went on the rocks in the fog and dashed to pieces yesterday, twelve miles north of here. Eight of the crew and the passengers perished, including two women, who, after climbing on the rocks and believing themselves saved, were washed off. Life savers went to the rescue through the fog, but reached the scene of the disaster only after the ship crumbled. One body, that of Miss Lena Miller, a Vancouver girl, was rescued. Raphael Medina, a Mexican girl, was picked up alive. It is believed another man was saved.

Risking His Life to See Game

This photo was taken at the Braves field in Boston, when the Red Sox and the Phillies played to the largest crowd that ever saw a baseball game. A hundred boys and men climbed the pipe line, twenty feet in the air, to the top of the brick wall surrounding the field. Below is seen a Boston policeman yelling, but helpless. Boston was baseball mad, and hundreds climbed the brick wall in defiance of policemen.

What the War Moves Mean

By J. W. T. MASON
 (Written for the United Press)

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—Great Britain's declaration of war on Bulgaria makes her the first of the allied nations to accept the German challenge in the Balkans, and emphasizes the dominant part England will play if the entente powers check the Teutons.

The Serbs are appealing for the delayed help that has mysteriously disappeared between Salonika and Serbia, and while she cries out, the nation faces the prospect that once entrenched in Serbia's mountains, the Germans could be dislodged only by a force of 2,000,000. But Serbia's salvation, however, is apparently an unimportant part of the allies' plans. Their major consideration is to prevent the establishment of a permanent line of communication from Hungary to Constantinople. The minimum length of this line is 450 miles, and only thirty of it is necessary through Serbia.

It is not essential, therefore, to halt the Austro-Germans in Serbia. Moreover, the increasingly equivocal attitude of Greece makes the expedition into Serbia, from the Salonika base hazardous. It has been intimated in the British parliament that the Greek situation is not satisfactory to the military leaders. From this, it may mean that the allies, perhaps, are considering an alternative to the Serbian expedition. One is to land on the Aegean coast of Bulgaria; the other is to send them into European Turkey. The allies' principal asset is men. Great Britain has 2,000,000 in reserve, available for early action. Her declaration against Bulgaria may mean that she will supply the needed men. If she does, the Germans cannot permanently reinforce Turkey, for the line of communication, if established, will be broken eventually, unless the British voluntarily retire from the engagement.
