Governor to Officiate Oregon Week at Fair

(Herald Special Service) OREGON BUILDING, P. P. I. E., Oct. 20.—Finally convinced that he really ought to come to the exposition, and, even against his desires, permit himself to become the center of special occasions arranged by the exposition officials that Oregon might be honored as other states have been, Governor James Withycombe has signified that he will be here October 30, and remain a week.

Some time ago the date named was scheduled as "Oregon Participation Day," and plans made for such activities as might bring Oregon to the attention of exposition visitors, and the nation as well, in some memorable way. It was assumed that Oregon's governor would fall in with the plans, but those who were doing the planning forgot the governor's preference for work and his dislike of the spotlight and the kowtowing. When Commissioner Clarke outlined the situation to him, and pointed out that it was his duty, if not his pleasure, to come here and enable Oregon to make a big noise, Governor Withycombe indicated that he had duties to perform at Salem, and begged to be excused. Then Commissioner Booth and Manager Hyland took up the matter, and through letters and telegrams, which flew thick and fast, the governor was finally enabled to see his way clear to make the sacrifice of time and personal inclination the trip requires.

As it is, everybody connected with Oregon's affairs at the exposition is happy, and special effort is to be made to make Oregon's final great occasion the greatest of the great. Besides the all-day affair on Saturday, October 30, which will be in the hands of the exposition officials, Monday, November 1, is to be made a special occasion, and throughout the week there will be a gathering of the Oregon clans. The thousands of former Oregonians in California will receive special invitations to meet the crowds of Oregonians who will come from the north at this time to be present at Oregon's greatest occasion, to attend the stock show and to see the splendor of San Francisco Day, certain to bring the largest of exposition crowds. Oregon apples, cider, loganberry juice, gold medal prunes and Tillamook cheese will flow all week, and in a social way the Oregon building will be the scene of many occasions. Aside from the pleasure of these big affairs (which involve no end of labor), these occasions are absolutely essential as rallying points by which special advertising can be secured and special attention directed to Oregon's participation at the exposition. Each state makes every effort possible to attract attention, and but for special occasions, many of these would drop from public view. When other states make big noises it is necessary for Oregon to do her best—and nothing will be left undone in the week beginning October 30.

America's Greatest Citizen

IN HONOR OF THE THIRTY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INCANDESCENT LAMP AND THE WORLD'S GREATEST INVENTOR, OCTOBER 21ST HAS BEEN SET ASIDE AS EDISON DAY

greatest activities, when he worked twenty hours a day, stalling naps on work benches, in corridors, and wherever he could.

He perfected automatic telegraphy, made a successful typewriter, perfected a device whereby four messages could be sent over the same wire, invented the phonograph in 1877, and then spent several years working at the new telephone apparatus, perfecting the receiver.

The invention of the electric lamp came in those strenuous days. The world had become familiar already with the big arc lamp, and was using it in lighthouses, in public parks and on streets, but it wanted a light that could be used indoors in small units, comparable with wax and tallow candles, gas jets and the oil lamp. Work went on day and night in those years of 1878 and 1879. To go off to sleep was regarded almost as treason. One might get a wink or two at the laboratories, if some place could be found. Edison, himself, in spite of all reports to the contrary, had to get a nap once in a while. One of his resorts was the cupboard under the stairway, where he slept among hot brooms and scrubbing pads. He also showed great agility in sleeping inside a roll-top desk—so far as is known, this invention has never been patented.

In the little old laboratory in Menlo Park, N. J., Edison and his staff worked day and night to find anything under the sun that would hang together as a "filament," when the electric "juice" was turned into it. Generally the darned stuff did not "stay put," but blew up before you could say Jack Robinson.

But one long-remembered day, October 21, 1879, as Edison sat at a bench with an odd-shaped crude little electric lamp in front of him, he turned on the electric current. The small horseshoe shaped filament in its glass bulb gave forth a glow of light—and the problem was solved.

In 1891 he invented the moving picture machine, which has made possible the moving picture theater in every city, town and village where there is electric current.

When the European war broke out, August 1, 1914, Edison, realizing the impossibility of procuring the necessary quantities of many chemicals from Germany, began experimenting with such chemicals in his laboratory. Being a heavy user of carbolic acid, he erected a plant for its manufacture and on the eighteenth day after starting the construction of the plant was making the acid. Four weeks later he was making 4,000 pounds of the acid each day.

On the night of December 9, 1914, Edison's plant at West Orange, N. J., was the scene of a great conflagration. Early next morning a gang of men were at work clearing up the wreck. Hundreds more were added during the day, and work was continued day and night. Within thirty-six hours after the fire Edison had given full orders for the complete rehabilitation of the plant.

About March, 1915, Edison conceived the idea of helping out the textile and rubber industries of America by making myrbane, aniline oil and aniline salt, which are always in great demand, and which had previously been imported from Germany. When it is stated that up to 1909 Edison had been granted 916 patents, one can begin to perceive how enormously prolific his work has been. Few indeed, have any conception of what he has done.

This is the thirty-sixth anniversary of that eventful day when Edison saw the first successful glow of light in his experiment, so the whole country joins in celebrating in honor of the Wizard of Menlo Park, whose great invention made possible electric light for homes.

In the thirty-six years following Edison's invention, there has been made over 500,000,000 electric incandescent lamps. Improvement followed improvement, until today the Edison Mazda lamp that takes the same amount of current as Edison's first eight-candle power lamp, gives about sixty candle power, or nearly eight times as much light.

In fact, all sizes of Edison Mazda lamps are so wonderfully efficient that no one can now afford to use the old style carbon lamps or other forms of lighting.
