Advice on the Winter Care of Stock on Farm

Prepared by Expert of U. S. Agricultural Dept.

The fall season is here, and with it approaches the winter feeding problem. It is time to consider what feed can most profitably be used. Grains will be high, and should be fed judiciously. The bulk of the feed used for wintering stock should be made up of roughages from the farm. Small amounts of concentrates, fed daily with these feeds, make comparatively cheap rations entirely suitable to certain classes of live stock.
 For convenience in planning winter feeding, farm animals may be divided into three classes.
 1—Mature animals not producing an income during winter months.
 2—Animals producing an income during the winter.
 3—Young and growing stock to be retained on the farm the following summer.
 In class 1 may be included all mature live stock held on the farm, either for breeding purposes, future work, or finishing for the market the following summer.
 In class 2 may be included work horses, cows producing milk, and stock being fattened for market or conditioned for sale during the winter months.
 In class 3 may be included all young and growing stock on the farm. The big saving in the winter feed bill can be made with class 1. This does not mean that animals of this class should be permitted to come through the winter in a run-down and weakened condition. Rather than consider such a practice, it would be far better to sell the stock in the fall. It is meant, however, that they can and should be maintained on the cheaper feeds. Roughages, supplemented by a small amount of concentrates (oil meal or grain) are in favor for them. Give the horses, cattle and sheep access to the cut-over grain fields and straw stacks, the meadows, wooded lots and pastures. As the winter advances, open the bars to splinters, feed racks and grain troughs.
 Silage will be invaluable at this time, especially for cattle and sheep. Keep the feed racks filled with hay and straw, but do not be wasteful in the feeding.
 The amount of grain to put in the trough cannot definitely be given. The same should vary in accordance with awareness of winter and condition of stock. This is a point that can only be decided in the feed lot. To permit the stock to go entirely without concentrates at this time would be a grave mistake, and in all probability make impossible the task of bringing it to spring feed in a healthy condition. Such a condition is imperative in the case of breeding animals and essential for feeders if best results are to be obtained.

 The matter of feeding hogs, included in class 1, presents an entirely different problem from that of the other stock. It is true that they may profitably be run on grain fields, meadows and pastures before snow arrives, but concentrates must constitute much of their ration after outside fields are closed for winter. Roots, chopped alfalfa, hay, apples and waste products of the dairy and household will do much toward keeping down the cost of their winter feed. In fact, any product that will substitute for the forage and grasses in the fields, which feeds are so essential to the conditioning of brood sows, can well be used.
 Concerning the feed for stock included in class 2 little need be said. It is a fact well known that horses at work require both care and feed. This they must receive if their work is done. To furnish the dairy cow with rations not intended to meet the demands made upon her system by the milk she gives would defeat the purpose for which she is kept, and equally certain would the stinting of the ration of fattening steers or hogs fail to make them ready for the Christmas market. As the food requirement for these different classes of livestock is a matter of common knowledge to stockmen, it remains only to see that it is provided in abundance.

 With class 3, the young and growing stock, most costly mistakes in feeding occur. A full realization of the fact that cheapest and most rapid gains in livestock are made with younger animals should do much toward obviating losses to farmers through insufficient and improper feeding of such animals. The failure to put gains on animals during the growing period intended for them by nature cannot be corrected by copious feeding at any later time. Their growth has been stunted, and rarely will they fully recover from the earlier setback. Even when they do it is a costly practice to put growth and flesh on a stunted animal, as compared to what could have been done when he was in a healthy and vigorous condition.
 But it is not necessary that young stock be fed as are fattening animals. Watch their feed troughs, and see that all of the daily rations are consumed. Do not feed them in excess, but make certain they are contented after each feeding. See that the exercise lot is used daily and that clean water is provided. The failure to feed young stock properly will open the way for future serious troubles, and no stockman can afford to encourage such a practice, even during the winter months.

Manufacturing Efficiency

THERE are 140 different manufacturing operations in making a shoe. The best equipped factories use similar machinery. The principal distinction in the finished product is in the quality of material and skill of the workmen.
 We purchase more fine leather to cut up exclusively into $4 and $5 shoes than any manufacturer in the world.
 Regal workmanship represents the highest development in shoe construction and finish. Regal factories are located where nothing but fine shoes are made, where skill in shoe-making is the chief inheritance.
