SOCIETY

By PHILEAS

Now that Christmas reunions, holiday visits, watch parties and similar affairs of the Yuletide season are finished, and the Christmas trees are being dismantled of their pretty finery and chucked out; now that school is again about to start, Klamath Falls' social world is beginning to readjust itself, and the coming week will see a resumption of activities by practically every organization, following a vacation through the holidays.

The week was not without social events of an enjoyable nature, however. Beginning with the "U" Club dance Thursday night, and continuing through with the Commercial Club party and several watch parties and dances last night, the evenings were pretty well taken up. With the ice on Lake Ewauna and Upper Klamath Lake the best it has been for years, Thursday and Friday afternoons saw these big ponds well peopled, and a happy carefree crowd of youngsters and grown-ups enjoyed our matchless midwinter outdoor pastime with gleeful abandon.

The gift of the departing year to the Klamath country was a beautiful white mantle, and with several inches of snow on the ground, we are all assured of coasting parties, bob sled expeditions, snowball fights and the other joys that render the winter season in Klamath county one that develops the muscles of our boys and girls, a season that is so appealing that it calls all out of doors, and instills red blood and energy into young and old. Truly, tis a joy to live in Klamath during the winter, instead of being forced to carry umbrellas and splash about in the mud of other sections, susceptible to colds and similar ailments.

We might mention as a social note that John Barleycorn, alias Demon Rum, alias many other titles, affectionate and antithesis, has departed our state, for an indefinite time. And with John's departure comes the question to many: "What effect will this have on the success of dancing parties?"

Now, Gentle Reader, if you do not attend the dancing parties held here—which are by far the most elaborate held in Southern Oregon—don't get the idea from the foregoing that hope here are riots. Far from it. But a big feature has always been the punch, a refreshing beverage for the thirsty devotees of the Terpsichorean muse. Punch can cost from twenty cents to five dollars or more a gallon, so there is a wide range of choice for the people in charge of a dance. But as with everything else, the good things come the highest. Nothing but the best has been served in the way of punch at the Klamath dances. The best means the efforts of a skilled mixerologist with 1,001 ingredients—a dash of this, a cup of that, a dozen oranges or lemons, and so on. Some of these ingredients are not now in the market. To use a term heard in polite circles, the sale of these is a thing that's "not being done" by law abiding merchants. But again, Reader, if you are not of the dancing set, pray do not become alarmed for the morals, etc., of those who do dance. Remember that in the good old mince meat we all enjoy, and in the making of which so many women pride themselves, there enters into the spirit of the concoction an ingredient which is also not on sale in Oregon. In this punch we've been mixing, the ingredient is used just about as much as in mince meat, and for the same purpose—favor improvement.

Klamath Falls dancing people are used to the best, with the White Pelican, automobile livery, full dress suits, beautiful evening gowns and punch. They demand the best, being what you might term connoisseurs. And as mince meat is allowable, we can, so doubt, look for the same brand of punch as of yore.

One of the big events of the holiday season with the young people was the dancing party given Tuesday night by the "U" Club, an organization of students and alumni of the University of Oregon, at Moose Hall. The young men comprising the organization have attended a school that is noted all over the Northwest for the success of its entertainments, and in their initial party the club members, familiar with such gorgeous affairs as the "Junior prom" and the class and frat parties, made the evening's enjoyment begin with the moment of entering, for the hall was most beautifully bedecked for the occasion. Lemon yellow and green, the "Varsity" colors, predominated, and in addition to pennants, there were streamers of the two shades extending across the room. Evergreens were also used with pretty effect, and the lights were shaded so they cast a subdued glow on the happy throng as they danced to the strains of the Barlow orchestra. The party was informal, and it was one that was highly enjoyed by all attending. The future hope of the club are being awaited eagerly.

Another big event of the week was the members' meeting of the Commercial Club, held Thursday night in I. O. O. F. hall. This was a "kid affair," and the majority of the seventy or more attending came clad in clothing of the juvenile period. The hall was arranged as a school room, with blackboards, etc., and a seat in front for the teacher, R. H. Decker. It was a useful bunch of scholars, and whenever they deemed it was time for a recess they cleared the floor, and enjoyed the "Virginny reel," quadrille and other dances, or played "ring-around-Rose," "Ruth and Jacob," or some of the other old party favorites, despite all the teacher could do to stop them. In fact, when C. C. Hogue, as "inspector," visited the school, he pronounced it one of the nicest he had ever seen—second only to the Presbyterian Sunday school. School periods and recesses were used for the rendition of a clever program, including among other numbers a series of folk dances and songs by Miss Maud Baldwin, Mrs. S. Edward Martin, Miss Agnes Swoboda, Miss Laura Bice, Miss Hazel Hardenbrook, Miss Helen Paxson and Miss Lillian

Who Won't Get Skates if This Sport Suit Is Worn?

Here we have a unique though very practical costume which can be used equally as well for all outdoor sports, skating, skiing, mountain climbing, and horseback riding. This costume, which is entirely new and unlike the usual sporting models, is being worn by Miss Margaret Numa, a prima donna in "Alone at Last." It is made up of a turkey-red kid leather, and just a touch of beige colored broadcloth collar and cuffs to soften it. The coat is strictly military style, the tight waist line belted in with a leather belt as a fastening on the side and reaches to the knees.

In opening the coat, one can see the little bloomer effect trousers, which are tight around the limbs, and the laced boots come up to reach the bottom of the trousers. It has three pockets, one above the waist line, and one each hip, below the belt. The costume is more serviceable than anything of its kind made in broadcloth. It is not as perishable as softer material. Despite the fact that it has trousers. It cannot be termed immodest, for they were introduced only to give the wearer freedom of movement.
