How the Italians Look at the War Year of '15

barred Italy's way toward the Julian Alps on the east and the Istrian peninsula to the south.

The naval program was this: Destruction of Austrian commerce on the Adriatic and adjacent waters and the bottling up or destruction of the Austrian fleet.

On land today Italy faces the New Year as the only one of the allied powers whose main army is firmly entrenched on the soil of an enemy. On water the Duke of Abruzzi's fleet is supreme. The Austrian fleet, refuged in Pola harbor, refused the Italian challenge just as the German fleet defies the British—in the Kiel canal. Like Germany, Austria is unable to give safe convoy to her own commerce.

With an army of more than 2,250,000 men in uniform; with reserves of 1,750,000 men between 18 and 38 yet to be called to the colors; with abundant equipment, especially heavy artillery; backed by a splendid industrial mobilization capable of feeding munitions for an emergency, Italy looks to the future with the utmost confidence. This feeling was vividly reflected in the recent utterances of Baron Sonnino, minister of foreign affairs, in the chamber and in which he announced not only Italy's agreement with the allies but also a separate peace, but her purpose to extend the campaign across the Adriatic in support of the stricken country of Serbia.

In answer to the latter pledge, 50,000 Italian troops have already landed

SADOGRAPH

Dearest Public:

You were nice to me, and I like you, and to show you my heart is in the right place I am going to sell everything I have left in stock at a price that is a winner for you.

I am just as happy as smart people, and I got money and love galore, and I would shed some of the love to you, but I got to pay a guy what I owe, so you be sure and come over and get my price on jewelry before you buy.

I don't care if you don't love me, why, that face of yours looks like it had wore out three other bodies before you got this one. I guess you are some pretty picture.

I meant this for a guy that said I was high priced, and he was so low down as to lie, and besides, he had never been in my house. I do love you, though, and I dis can't help it.

Amelia and I are going to take a trip on the Straborn special as soon as the business men get the track laid, and we are going to Portland, where all the brains of Oregon are situated, and she is going to splash all the water out of the Columbia, as they need no chasers now.

Tomorrow I am going to sell everything I have in this store, and a lot more, I am going to meet anybody's price, and I am going to go further; and so you squeeze your little dollar until it says "cheap, cheap, cheap," then come over. You watch my window and see if I don't put the ham in hammer, and put a knock in the rotten old jewelry business.

Some day I will tell you the story of the boy that got a pony for Christmas, but it got away.

She picked the seat from a scatter
And she slipped it to a cat.
It humped its back
And fussed its tail,
And scratched her, just like that.

That's what I'll do to you if you don't come over.

in Albania where pioneers are busy at road building and other means of transport through the pathless mountains. Food and clothing by the shipload are being sent by the Italians for the Serbian refugees.

Seven months of fighting along the lines of the general staff's plan of campaign have produced far greater results than the daily communiques have indicated. On the Isonzo front the offensive has reached the stage where an Italian occupation of the entire Istrian peninsula, as well as effective thrusts northward and eastward, is believed to be possible early in 1916.

The northern campaign, in the Trentino and Carnic regions, has closed and with the object obtained. After months of the severest and most difficult mountain warfare, heroic struggles on precipitous battlegrounds, the Alpine troops, Bersaglieri and infantry with heavy artillery, sometimes drawn up the mountain sides with ropes, have battered fort after fort into dust, stormed and captured hitherto impregnable Austrian defenses, and consolidated the conquered crags and valleys against a successful counter offensive. The flood gates of invasion for which Austria had been preparing since 1866 and also which she had boasted would give her the city of Verona before Italy could reach Gorizia, are now closed against her with double bar and lock.

Weeks of desperate fighting against terrific odds were sometimes required by the Italians to take a single fortress or position in this phase of the campaign.

While this was going on, the second part of the general staff plan was being executed in the Isonzo valley. On June 2 King Victor's armies crossed the Isonzo. On June 9, Monfalcone fell to General Cadorna. Two days later Gradisca had succumbed and the Austrians retreated to Gorizia. On July 7, the bridgehead at Gorizia was also reached by the Italian army, where for five months the ebb and flow of battle had soaked the soil with Italian and Austrian blood. A general advance over the entire front from Tolmino to Monfalcone on July 22 still found Cadorna's troops before Gorizia locked in the death struggle.

Gorizia's loss would mean a severe blow to Austria and all means are employed to defend it. Reinforcements were brought from Galicia, and it was only the timely arrival of German regiments on one occasion that saved the Austrians from disastrous rout in the sector north of Piava.

During the latter days of November, the Austrian resistance at Gorizia began to weaken. December 1 found the city invested from three sides, the surrounding fortresses pounded to fragments by Italian howitzers and the town defended by only a single line of trenches. Italian shells of heavy calibre were plowing the streets.

The fall of Gorizia would give general Cadorna's troops access to all the roads leading toward Villach to the north, Vaibach to the east, and the city of Trieste to the south. The investment of Trieste would mean an expeditionary occupation of the Istrian peninsula, including Pola, refuge of the Austrian fleet.

According to the latest estimates the total Austrian casualties in the Italian campaign are more than 300,000 and of which 60,000 were killed. Austrian prisoners in Italy number 50,000. The Italian losses, too, have been heavy, but probably less than that of the Austrians.
