According to Statistics, Injuries From Automobiles on Decrease

(Herald Special Service)

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 5.—Is the deathliness of the automobile increasing or decreasing?

This question seems to be answered in a very conclusive manner by the bureau of the census, in making public some preliminary mortality statistics for the year 1914, which indicate that during the five years from 1909 to 1914 the number of automobiles in use in the United States increased more than twice as rapidly as the number of fatalities caused by them.

At the close of 1909, according to figures compiled by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce of New York city, from state registration reports, due allowance being made for duplicate registrations, the number of automobiles in use in the United States was approximately 200,000; by the close of 1913 it had risen to 1,270,000; and a year later, at the end of 1914, it was 1,750,000.

In the meantime the number of deaths due to automobile accidents and injuries increased from 632 in the death registration area in 1909, containing 56 per cent of the population of the United States, to 2,623 in the same area in 1914; and the increase from 1913 to 1914, for the registration area as constituted in 1913, then containing 65 per cent of the population of the country, was from 2,488 to 2,795.

Thus a five year increase of 775 per cent—accepting as reliable the figures compiled by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce—in number of machines has been accompanied by an increase of 315 per cent in automobile fatalities; and a one-year increase of 28 per cent in number of machines has been accompanied by an increase of 12 per cent in fatalities.

Perhaps a more reliable comparison, from the statistician's point of view can be made between the increase in number of automobiles in use and the increase in the rate per 100,000 population for deaths caused by them. This is because, with a given number of machines in use in a given area, the fatalities due to them will tend to be proportional to the population of that area.

When the comparison is made on this basis, it appears that a five-year increase of 775 per cent in number of machines has been accompanied by an increase of 258 per cent—from 12 to 43 per 100,000 population—in the death rate resulting from automobile fatalities. Similarly, a one-year increase of 38 per cent in number of automobiles has taken place along with an increase of only 10 per cent—from 3.9 to 4.3 per 1,000—in the death rate charged to them.

One cause of this proportional decrease in the destructiveness of the automobile is undoubtedly to be found in a reduction in average annual mileage per machine; but, after due weight is given this factor, and a suitable margin is allowed for possible inaccuracy in the estimated portion of the automobile statistics, the figures still appear to furnish ample justification for the conclusion that the automobile today is being driven with more care and more regard for public safety than it was a few years ago.

'Watchful Waiting' Sums Up Russia's Attitude Now

gun to flow from the factories and shops in every important Russian city; the Russian cabinet has been reformed with particular reference to a more active conduct of the war; the peasants who used to drink vodka have become used to vodka-less Russia and are putting their profits from vodka-less harvests—hence bigger harvests—into the provisional banks; Grand Duke Nicholas has been superseded by the czar as commander-in-chief and has taken hold of the important campaign in the Caucasus. Stirred to renewed vigor under its ruler, the army has used the shells born of the industrial mobilization and repulsed the enemy in the vicinity of Riga, besides putting him on the defensive elsewhere.

These and many more things have happened in Russia since the double eagle whacked the bear on the anout. The roar for munitions which the bear let out soon reached Japan, England and America, and for the last three months rifles, shells and cannon have been pouring into the Pacific and Arctic ports. Canadian ice-breakers will keep Archangel open all winter for the munition laden ships from America. Heavily loaded trains are crawling across the Siberian plains in almost endless procession, stopping here and there to deposit rifles and cartridges for the men who have been training with sticks and only lacked the arms wherewith to join the armies now preparing for Russia's future campaign.

With the beginning of the new year various estimates place the number of fresh-armed troops at 5,000,000. At least two million more are being armed at the rate of over half a million a month. An additional million 20-year-old youths were called up on December 4th. These will take their places in the ranks early in the year.

Russia's veterans already holding the battle line from Riga to the Black Sea, and operating in the Caucasus are estimated to total at least 4,000,000, all hardy fighters, making the total of Russian military strength in sight approximately 12,000,000 men.

Like England, France and Italy, Russia is preparing to fight in the Balkans. This campaign, which is already under way, is under the leadership of General Dimitrieff, ex-commander of the Ninth Bulgarian army, who renounced Czar Ferdinand and Bulgaria, and sent back the military decorations tendered him by his former sovereign. Dimitrieff's first objective is Bulgaria. Anticipation of which early in December sent Austro-German and Bulgarian regiments hastily to Rutchuk, the nearest Bulgarian city to the Russian border.

It was Russia that delivered Bulgaria from the Turkish yoke. When faced by the Russians as a foe, led by a former popular general of the Bulgarian army, wholesale desertions from the Bulgar forces are considered a potent possibility.

Russian forces, too have been sent in ample numbers to the Caucasus in order, if necessary, to lend aid to the British in the event the Suez canal should be seriously threatened by the reinforced German-led Turks.

Though Russia has lost an estimated million and a half prisoners to Germany and Austria, nearly a million men of the double enemy have been captured and sent to Siberia, where they are in no danger of liberation, as are the Russian prisoners in Germany and Austria. The Austro-German losses during the last three months, on the Russian front, have been enormous. Russia's own losses have not been slight, but they undoubtedly are far under those of the enemy, most of whose fighting has been offensive. The activities of General Ivanoff in Eastern Galicia during September, October and November are credited with putting 200,000 of the enemy out of the fight.

Optimism has now taken the place of the pessimism that prevailed in Russia during the dark days of the summer. The man on the street in Petrograd knows as well as the highest official that Russia plans an offensive against Germany and Austria in the spring of 1916 the like of which the world has never experienced. Perhaps it will come sooner. Whether the expenditure of vast quantities of ammunition on the front, starting in November and December, is preparation for an advance earlier than March, or just a measure to keep the Germans from digging in and protecting themselves against the intense cold of a Russian winter is not quite clear.

Russia is generally watchfully waiting, but it takes no clairvoyant to forecast that the animal that confronts the Germans before many weeks will not be the same sore-nosed beast of the summer and autumn of 1915.
