

Real Road Support

The pledge made by two young fellows in Paisley in support of the Straborn railway project is worthy of serious consideration by every citizen in every community through which this road will pass. Charles Gaylord has promised to give one hundred days work on the right of way and Ross Banister has agreed to give fifty days work with himself and team. This is the spirit which will build a pioneer railroad. It is such proposals as this which hearten the men behind this project and make them feel that the people of this section have a real interest in this great work.—Chewaucan Press.

IS IT JUSTIFIED?

FOR the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, for promoting commerce, and for commercial attaches, the department of commerce asks for appropriations aggregating $735,360 in 1916 as compared with $369,280 in 1915—an increase of 100 per cent. As a basis for this demand upon a depleted treasury, the department avers that it has aided American shippers in securing foreign orders.

Let us see. Leaving out of consideration those countries which are at war, and whose demands for our products are entirely independent of any selling efforts, we find from department of commerce reports that for twelve months ending with September, 1915, our exports to nations at peace approximately amounted to $867,695,000 as compared with a total of $985,125,000 in the corresponding period in 1913, while the bureau was still working under the system established by Republicans. This shows a decrease of $117,430,000.

In the face of this enormous loss of export trade with nations at peace, how can the department of commerce claim to have rendered any material assistance in finding markets for our goods?

What sort of reception would an American traveling salesman find in the head office of his employer if he came in with a request for an increase in salary on the plea that he had increased the company's business, when the books of the company showed a decrease rather than an increase? The company might increase the salary of the position but it would find a new man to fill it.

CHINESE JOURNALISM

IF YOU wish to subscribe to the "Peking Gazette," printed in English by Chinese at the Chinese capital, you must pony up $25 "Mex" money. If you live outside China, it costs you just $12.50 more for your postage.

These facts are gleaned from a copy of the Gazette sent here by "Gross" Wishard, a former local man, who is now a chief electrician on one of the warships in Oriental waters. A governmental order appearing follows:

Duke Wu-shih-hu-pu-yen, Acting Dzasak of the Rear Banner of the Right Wing of Khorchin, in a despatch, requests that Lama Tan-pa-lu-leh-ma, the Dzasak and Hubilhan of the Wu-lu-hsi-yin-kuei-pu-yen-to Lamastry of the Banner of the Prince of Tu-shih-yitu, and his pupil, Treasurer Chi-mu-pa-ko-leh-sun, who persuaded the Mongolians to become loyal and sincere towards the Central Government, be rewarded, etc. Tan-pa-lu-leh-ma is hereby given the title of Hutukhtu, and Chi-mu-pa-ko-leh-sun, the title of Chio-er-chi, as an encouragement. The rest shall be done as requested.

Eastern Mediterranean, the New Scene of Submarine Warfare Operations

Austrian submarines which managed to escape from Pola, the Adriatic base of the Austrian fleet, have taken the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea for their operations. There they have sunk the Ancona and Persia and thus come into conflict with the American government. A dozen or more smaller vessels have also gone down. The chief war zone seems to be between the island of Crete and the coast of Africa.

Rabies, Carried Into Oregon in 1910, Has Become Real Menace

Disease Which Has Ravaged Eastern Oregon Sections Is Spreading, and Klamath County Will Be Affected If Precautions Are Not Taken

The following article on rabies, its history in Oregon, etc., was prepared by the state board of health:

In the late fall of 1910, rabies was carried across the border line of both the states of Washington and Oregon by a coyote. Entering as it did in the northwest triangle of our state, it spread by means of both domestic and wild animals in fan shape fashion until there are now fourteen counties affected, and a condition most serious confronts the authorities and people. Just as a man may be called James by another and a third address him as Jim, just so this disease is known by different names to different people, depending upon which one they are most familiar with. Thus we hear the following names of rabies, hydrophobia, rage, rabia, "mad" animal, rabid animal, all representing the same identical disease.

The inoculation of subjects is through the medium of the saliva of the infected animal during the active stages of the disease. However, it has been found that some rabid animals have been infected for a period of from two to three days before the first manifestations of the disease have presented themselves.

It is necessary for the saliva of the infected animal to get beneath the skin of the subject, thus infection may be caused by a bite or by the animal licking the hand of its master, the latter provided there has been a previous abrasion or break in the skin. The probability of the subject being inoculated is governed, to a large extent, by the situation and severity of the injury, also whether the animal has bitten through clothing or has attacked the bare skin.

The danger of a bite where the fangs of the animal pass through the clothing is lessened because of the wiping of the saliva from the teeth. The incubation period is also influenced to a large extent by the severity and depth of the wound and its nearness to the large nerve trunks.

It is now well known that the infecting material contained in the saliva of the animal is carried to the brain by means of the nerves. Therefore, a bite on the cheek would be much more serious than a bite on the hand, as the closer the injury to the brain or to large nerve trunks, the shorter the incubation period.

In just what manner the poison reaches the brain is not known.

Just what these small bodies are is not yet thoroughly understood. They are probably parasite in origin, and probably go through some cycle of development much in the same manner as the parasite of malaria. One scientist working along this line is claiming to be growing these organisms, though no further work on it has yet been published.

The incubation period of this disease varies from about seven days to a period extending over seven months. However, for general purposes, it may be said that the usual incubation period is from two to six weeks' time. At the end of this time, the animal is noted to be acting peculiarly—he does not seem natural; he is nervous, apparently worried about something; is uneasy and restless, or may shun the houses or human beings with whom he has been friendly; or, sometimes, the reverse of this is seen, the animal becomes more affectionate, stays close to its master, jumping up on him, trying to lick his hands and face, and is anxious to be petted.

This particular stage lasts but a short time, and then the disease takes one of two forms—the paralytic or the furious type. In the former variety the animal oftentimes is weak, stumbles, falls upon attempting to run; in fact, not much of an attempt to run can be made because in a short time he becomes paralyzed, dragging his hind quarters. Again it has been quite frequently noticed that the animal's jaw seems to drop; he swallows peculiarly, or he does not swallow at all, saliva drools from his mouth, and he has all the appearance of choking. Very soon he is unable to swallow at all, and steals to some secluded and darkened spot and dies.

Both in this and the furious type it may be said that animals almost invariably die within seventy-two hours after the first symptoms have made their appearance. In the furious type, after a short period of peculiar behavior, the animal often disappears, traveling a distance of from fifteen to fifty miles. He has become a raging brute, snapping and biting at everything that comes in his way.

The old belief that a mad animal travels in a straight line is erroneous. It is true he will not go far out of his way from men or other animals, but goes wherever his insane fancy takes him. This may be down a traveled road or trail in the woods, or across a prairie, or he may jump into yards of houses he is passing to engage in fight with other animals.

The mad dog, after his sortie, may return to his home, there to hunt cover and die. Paralysis is noted in this form the last few hours of the disease, it becoming impossible for the animal to move.

There are one or two characteristic things about animals that die of rabies. One is that quite often their mouths are found filled with straw, brush or other material. Another is the drawing up of the upper lip to the side of the mouth. This is seen with great frequency. Again, quite often the tongue is found to be bitten through and held firmly clenched between the teeth.

As in the case of an insane human, so in this the mentality deteriorates and is unbalanced. Very few things are done which would be done in normal circumstances, and due to this infection of the nerve centers the animal becomes entirely different from its normal self.

There is a complete change in the nature, habits and characteristics.

The coyote—the poor, miserable coyote—an animal of such nature and habits that its name and that of coward are almost synonymous, who shuns man as Satan does holy water, under the influence of this infection becomes as fierce, ferocious and venomous as the cornered cougar, the wounded tiger of the bear when the safety of her cubs is threatened. The change of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde was never so complete as the change of the slinking, cowardly night prowler into the wildly attacking, fighting animal whose fangs are charged with a
