Of the total area of approximately 9,700 acres planted with young trees by the forest service during the fiscal year 1915, nearly 3,000 acres was planted in Oregon and Washington. Of the total area sowed with tree seed, 5,876 acres, approximately 500 acres were sowed in Oregon.

In Oregon and Washington there are, outside of the national forests, about 3,000,000 acres of logged off land, much of it agricultural in character, now lying idle.

HIGH TYPE OF MEN FOLLOW STOCK FARMING

LIVESTOCK farming means the raising of profitable animals—animals which pay for their keep and return a profit. Profit producing animals mean pure bred, well bred, carefully selected sires, mated with females of a particular type for a particular purpose. Intelligent feeding, proper care and good management are essentials that must have attention, else selection and breeding do not count. Such problems are difficult ones. They challenge a man's best talent and skill. They make him wide awake, progressive and resourceful. The many business details connected with the industry require a wide knowledge and experience, and develop executive ability that makes leaders.

Why shouldn't stockmen lead? How many successful stockmen did you ever see who groomed the cows with a milk stool or coaxed the steers to the feeding rack with a "blacksnake," or kicked the lambs out of the way? A real stockman's voice, manners and actions are kind and gentle. His love of animal life keeps him with his stock, often when he knows that there is nothing lacking to make them comfortable. His animals feel his gentleness and kindness, and respond to it. He spreads it in his home and among his neighbors, and finds it responded to there.

Go into any community where livestock has reached a high state of development and what do you find? Has not citizenship kept pace? Are not the schools and churches efficient and well supported? Is not the community orderly and well governed? Who are the community leaders? The most modern and best governed states are the livestock states. The steady decrease of farm population has been viewed with much alarm. Just how far the social disadvantages of country life effect the problem it is hard to say, but it is certain that in stock raising communities there is less movement from the farms to the town and city. Farm animals have an attraction for most boys and girls, and the social life in the stock raising community seems to be stronger knit.

Only last summer the Wisconsin Livestock Breeders' Association provided speakers for about fifty summer picnics of community breeders in every part of the state, and there were probably twice as many more held. The stock breeder's calling is a manly, splendid and ennobling one. The man who engages in it along the lines he must follow in order to make a success of his undertaking is helping the Creator's work; he is improving the health and strength of his fellowmen, adding to the manliness of man and increasing the wealth and prosperity of the world.—Stephen A. Baird, president of the Wisconsin Livestock Breeders' Association.

Scattered Shots

AFTER YOU peruse the above, please bear in mind that this is largely a stock raising country.

WHEN THE WEST joined with California cities in urging President Wilson to come out to the expositions, he refused every time. But he finds time to make stumping tours when his political future seems imperiled.

HOME MERCHANTS deserve the support of every resident of Klamath Falls. But home merchants must remember it is their duty to keep on hand a proper stock of merchandise at right prices, and also that customers have a right to expect courteous attention.

NOW THAT OREGON is dry, the city council has decided to discard the old water wagon for the more up-to-date street flusher.

FEED THE BIRDS—and kill the coyotes.

THE WAY to get industries for a town is to go after them. At present Dorris offers twenty acres as a site for a box factory. What will Klamath Falls do to keep what industries it has?

LACK OF FAITH CAUSED FAILURE OF FORD PLAN, SAYS MEMBER OF PARTY

like a sick man them, but his malady seemed rather of the spirit than the body.

Ford moved and spoke like a person in a semi-trance. He seemed almost completely broken. Early in the voyage he declared that squabbling among the peace delegates was a small matter, that disagreements were to be expected in any community, and that when the party landed at Christiania these troubles would quickly disappear. On this night, however, his manner suggested that he realized the fundamental weakness of his organization—that he had lost hope.

While Ford admitted that he based his early hopes only on faith, Mme. Rosika Schwimmer declared she had written assurances from officials of all neutral European governments that they would welcome such an effort as the one undertaken by Ford and from men in high positions at the chancelleries of certain of the warring nations "on both sides," that they were at least not unfriendly to the plan. The second day of the party's stay in Christiania Premier Knudsen of Norway denied the truth of her statement. Numerous cables received in Christiania from Mme. Schwimmer addressed to peace organizations and discussing arrangements for the Ford party's reception and for co-operation in peace work, still lay in the Christiania telegraph office because there were no such organizations to deliver them. Those who opposed Mme. Schwimmer assert that she had thus tried to deceive Ford concerning the strength of peace sentiment in Scandinavia.

Mme. Schwimmer boasted that she had a "dossier" of every person on the ship, and that not a word was said which she did not know of almost immediately. There were many indications that this was no idle boast. In throwing the expedition upon the newspaper correspondents' mercy at Stockholm, the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Aked admitted that the press representatives had many legitimate grievances, but insisted his own grounds for complaint were even better than theirs. He had made heavy financial sacrifices to accompany the expedition, he said, and had been assured he was to have considerable voice in directing its policies. He had never, he declared, seen Ford for more than ten minutes at a time, and had had practically no influence.

Herman Bernstein, the New York Jewish editor, gave up his peace delegateship at Christiania, and continued the journey merely as a chronicler, at his own expense. Mrs. Ines Milholland Boissevain resigned from the party at Stockholm because she felt, she said, all attempts at democratic control of the party had been abandoned. Governor Manna of North Dakota, though professing to have left the expedition at Christiania for personal reasons, said confidentially that it would cost him thousands of dollars to explain to his constituents his connection with such a party of "nuts."

Judge Egn Lindsey and wife succeeded in interesting Ford, early in the voyage, in a plan for finding homes for European war orphans. The management, then controlled by Peace Secretary Louis F. Lochner and Mme. Schwimmer, served notice shortly after Ford's departure for home, that the steering committee would repudiate any subsidiary movement which did not have the committee's approval and such approval was refused the Lindseys. Dean S. S. Marquis of Detroit, Ford's close personal friend, was not on good terms with Mme. Schwimmer nor Lochner. It was the general impression that his influence was responsible for detaching Ford from the party. S. S. McClure was denounced by the management, and for his part spoke of the expedition's management in terms of contempt. Differences were not forgotten when the party landed. The various splits widened. They were not the result merely of divergent views. They were due to the petty rivalries for control of the expedition, to individual ambitions and to the failure of the greater number of delegates to grasp the bigness of the Ford idea. Henry Ford himself did not stick to his own ideal. If the Ford expedition had failed with dignity, it would not have been a failure. It would have been the highest spot in the history of altruistic endeavor since the crucifixion. Nobody can appreciate what actually happened who has not actually been with the expedition from the first.

No peace delegate is bold enough to deny that the expedition has been a succession of errors, but a few are still hopeful enough to profess a belief that these errors may yet be retrieved.

At present the expedition is led by Gaston Plaintiff, Ford's personal representative, a fat, oily, red-faced general salesman of automobiles, who knows all about Broadway, but admits he hasn't the remotest idea of any peace plan's meaning, but was left by "the old man" to do his best, and means to do it—whatever it is.
