

Pershing a Pastmaster at Evasion

United Press Service

EL PASO, Texas, March 31.—If General Pershing and his flying column should capture Francisco Villa today and Villa should ask the general what he was going to do with him, Pershing would, probably, counter with:

"Well, Villa, what do you think about it?"

For Pershing, as newspapermen had ample time and opportunity to learn when he was here, is not a communicative man.

Before you could see General Pershing, you had to warm an already over-heated chair in an outer office.

Major Hines, post adjutant, who had a desk in the same room would get a long distance call over the telephone. He'd bawl to an orderly, nod significantly at you, and the orderly politely shove you back into the hall. You felt like the frog in the well, that jumped one foot and fell back two.

Finally you were ushered into the presence of the man who is leading the American expedition into Mexico. Pershing has a very good memory for faces and names and correctly tags you when you greet him.

"Well, general, when you going in?"

"Haven't the slightest idea; what's the latest from Washington?"

"War department is not giving out much. San Antonio, says you're to have charge, though."

"Your information pretty reliable?"

"Sure. How long is it going to take you to catch Villa?"

"What do you think about it?" "I'll swap opinions with you six months."

"Ahem."

"Where was that bunch of the Sixteenth bound for?"

"West."

"Whereabouts?"

The general evidently is a close student of the European war.

"Somewhere in New Mexico," he grins.

The phone rings. The general nods his head towards the door. You've got that motion down pat now, so you beat it.

On the way out you tackle Major Hines, Captain Godson and everybody else wearing leather leggings (the infallible insignia of an officer).

After going the rounds of the government offices and other sources of information you go back to Fort Bliss and start all over again. About the third time you become so proficient in "questions and answers" that you can beat the "interviewees" to it every time.

An American correspondent on the border right now has about the same status as a Villista spy.

The picturization of Harold MacGrath's famous romance, "The Puppet Crown," with Ina Claire as the star and Carlyle Blackwell as the hero, is one of the most elaborate productions ever made by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play company. It is a modern romance, in that the events take place in a little mythical European kingdom supposed to be of the present day, but it is really in a world apart.

In these days when realism runs riot throughout the land, it is good, from time to time, to take a trip into the world of make-believe—into the land of beautiful princesses, of kings on tottering thrones, and brave American heroes who come to the rescue. In these days, when some authors seem bound to convince us that life is all sordid, it is good to hear the fine, clear note of the romance that never dies, and to drink deep of the clean, wholesome satisfaction to be found in such an offering as this.

This production will be shown at the Star tonight. In addition the Divano Vaudeville company will give an entire change of act.

Going back to the days when the slaves made rich the Southern planter and their traffic brought wealth to the rugged brutes who acted as "overseers" and "drivers," the producers of Bluebird photoplays have created a most interesting and sensational picture drama, entitled "The Grip of Jealousy," which will be the attraction at the Orpheus theater on Sunday and Monday.

Pretty Louise Lovely, an ideal type of Southern beauty, plays the leading role and she is supported by a company of Bluebird photoplayers that includes such clever people as Hayward Mack, who interprets the role of a distinguished Southern planter; Lon Chaney, the "heavy" of the cast, who is seen as the bullying over-lord of the slaves, and Marjia Moore, who makes a sweetly beautiful wail of fortune, buffeted by the cruelest of fates.

The foundation of the plot is a family feud among many generations of Grants and Moreys. Through the secret marriage of a Grant to a Morey, complications of such entangling nature as to incite murder, a kidnapping and chase by bloodhounds, of a slave girl through a driving rain, while the wind adds its fury to the ruggedness of the scene.

Are You Getting "Value Received" for the Money You Spend Buying Hosiery?

Some people are inclined to think buying hosiery a matter of very little importance. The cost of a pair of hose is but a trifle at the most, we admit, but buying hosiery, like anything else, cost money, especially when it becomes necessary to purchase new ones every few days.

SAVE THE DIMES AND QUARTERS by buying good hosiery—the kind that wears and gives universal satisfaction, and you'll be surprised how easily the dollars save themselves.

ARMOR PLATE HOSE needs no introduction to the majority of people in Klamath county. It was sold here for years by one of Klamath's reliable stores while engaged in the drygoods business. Armor Plate made an enviable reputation for itself then, as it has everywhere it has been introduced.

Oldest Soldier at Border

United Press Service
COLUMBUS, O., March 31.—The United States barracks here has the oldest soldier in active service in the United States army. He is Ota C. West, aged sixty-six, a private, who works in the barracks store room, but is ready to join the Villa chase.

"I'm no spring chicken, but if Uncle Sam wants an old fellow with a lot of 'pep' and who knows the fighting game to go after Villa, he sure can count on me," West said today.

Having reared a family and closed a busy civilian career which ran all the way from farming to college teaching and politics West, through special permission of Adjutant General Corbin enlisted in the army when he was fifty-one years of age.

A private has to serve thirty years before he is entitled to be retired on a pension. West has served fifteen years, five of which were in the Philippines, and he says he's going to serve out the other fifteen.

"During my entire army service I have not killed a man, but I've had some experiences. When I was a kid of six years of age in Cedar Falls, Iowa, near Spirit Lake, I was in the midst of a Sioux Indian massacre. I remember how the Indians shut us up in the village and how scared we all were.

"Do I remember the Civil War? I remember what a licking my dad gave me when I ran away from home at the age of fifteen to join the Union forces. I did not get very far. I was caught.

"I was at Fort Brown, Texas, in the third battery, 26th infantry in 1905 when the 25th infantry of colored troops had an uprising and President Roosevelt discharged the whole company."

In 1876, West taught commercial law at Oberlin university. In 1877, he became constable at Des Moines, and later was elected city assessor.

On McKinley's second call for volunteers he joined the Third Nebraska volunteers and served under Col. Bryan at Cuba. A year later he joined the army, went to the Philippines and then to Fort Wayne, Michigan, where he was promoted to quarter master sergeant of company B, 26th infantry.

Because of the expiration of his time West was discharged in 1918, came to Columbus and re-enlisted as a private at the age of sixty-three.
