This is the little adobe town of Parral in southern Chihuahua, where troopers of Major Frank Tompkins' command were invited in to buy food only to be attacked by Carranza soldiers. But some forty Mexicans paid the penalty with death, while only two American soldiers were killed.

If English Women Vote They'll Be in Control

By CHARLES P. STEWART
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, April 27.—Women will have a great deal to say about the running of England after the war. If they get the vote they will rule England's electorate, as there were 1,000,000 more British women than men before the war.

The suffragettes abandoned militant tactics when fighting with the Germans began, but they have been conducting an educational campaign ever since.

Its keynote has been the thorough advertisement of the extent to which women have taken the places of the men at the front. Since women can do men's work, the suffragettes argue, why weren't they entitled to the franchise on the same footing with men?

There is no theory about this proposition. It is practical. The women actually are doing work it used to be taken for granted only men satisfactorily could do. In a great many instances, it is conceded, they are doing it better than the men did. The country, too, is mighty glad to get them. It is begging for their help.

Munition making is largely in women's hands. Women are rapidly taking over the positions of the men in street car and bus conductors.

Women are running elevators. Women are acting as ticket sellers and choppers.

A women's army is being recruited to do England's farming. Women clerks are behind the counters of the retail stores of all kinds. Women chauffeurs are numerous. Women run delivery wagons. Women are doing all sorts of clerical work in banks, wholesale houses, insurance offices and counting rooms generally.

This drafting of women has been far more numerous on the European continent than in England. On the continent, however, there has been no such corresponding effort on the women's part to get value received for their wartime help, in the form of subsequent political concessions.

After all women have done during the war, it is hard to see how England can refuse what they demand later. At any rate, it is a safe conclusion that they will get a respectful hearing when they present their claims next time, instead of the contemptuous dismissal which their efforts met before the great European struggle.

Comment by the new women workers, too, shows that suffragette representations are making an impression on the rank and file. The next demand, consequently, will be no mere dilettante movement. Instead, it will come from the women who have done as much as any man in the fields to aid the country in an emergency, whose services and sacrifices already have been publicly recognized, and who can speak, and act, with a genuine determination never hitherto characteristic of suffragism in England.

If they fail to get what they want, it will be surprising. If they get it, England will be ruled electorally, by women. Census figures show that, before the war, there were about 1,000,000 more women than men in the British Isles. After the war, between the losses of men in the field and the expected heavy emigration, which will be largely young, unmarried men, the disproportion will be still larger—perhaps another 1,000,000.

Admiral Schley's Old Cutter to be Auctioned

United Press Service

SAN FRANCISCO, April 27.—After bucking the ice in most of the seven seas for thirty-five years, the Coast guard cutter Thetis is cruising into this port to go into the governmental discard today by public auction.

The European war saved the Thetis from the scrap heap. Steamship men all over the United States await her arrival here. They are to bid for her when the government auctioneer announces:

"One steamship, gentlemen." During her service the Thetis has not been a liner and a lady. She started out as a Dundee whaler, a work that requires mainly what sailors call "guts."

The Thetis entered the navy in 1883, when, commanded by then Captain W. S. Schley, she went with two other ships, to rescue Lieutenant A. W. Greeley, afterward Major Greeley, from

Dearest Public:

Were you ever a regular kid, and got licked in the morning for not washing your feet when you went to bed the night before?

Did you ever get mother's kiss and your dinner pail and be aimed for school and never get there, but wander to the hills and listen to the humming of the bees and watch the squirrels, and gather wild flowers, and fish, and have some other kid sell them and "whack" the money?

Gee, but wasn't it good to be alive, to feel the sunshine, and hear the songs of the birds, to smell the perfume of the flowers, and have the itch and warts, and not care if your hair was in or out, but just waller around and be content with the world.

Most generally these long-faced, serious guys, that can't smile, have plucked a lemon from the peach orchard, or are so eager for the filthy lucre or are framing to place the harpoon in you so deep that you will not try to take it out.

Once I was that guy, and it has not all escaped from me yet; that's why I am not serious enough for some folks. Seriousness is not a criterion of the massive intellect; it should be a signal for you to put on your armor if you don't want to be stung. I was going to build a platform to stand on for this county commissioner job, but I am not now, as I would have to tell the biggest bunch of damdest lies that you ever heard, but that is not my forte. I stand for good roads, and we have got to have them, as they are our best asset.

Business is business with me, and it's going to be the same if I am elected to help do business for Klamath county.

This is my home; I live in Klamath Falls, and if you are a republican I want your support; that is, if I am serious enough for you. I am paying my debts, and I guess that's about as good as these serious, self-anointed folks are doing.

Hurry to my aid.

The fact that she was condemned by the navy a dozen years ago did not interfere with her efficiency.
