A DELAYED REWARD

THE PEOPLE of Oregon, and cowhere the Indian uprisings have been comparatively recent, have every reason to feel gratified on account of the final recognition of the "Minute Men of the West" by the government. After years of delay, the United States has decided to reward their earlier efforts by giving them pensions. These men heeded the call of Duty, and went to the defense of the white migrant and settler without wating for a call to arms from Washington. Thy wasted no time in waiting for uniforms, etc., and as a result of their puick, effect work, their campaign was often successfully completed in a couple of weeks, or a month.

Recense some of these men were of the congressmen have seen fit to oppose the passage of the measure. They figured by length of service, not by service rendered. As a result, they finally passed the bill through the house with ninety days as the minimum service to be rewarded with pen-
