YOUNG PEOPLE HOLD SERVICES

CLASSES AT M. E. CHURCH WILL TAKE CHARGE OF THE SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES DURING THE REMAINDER OF THIS MONTH

The young people's classes of the Methodist Sunday school have formed an organization to take charge of the Sunday evening services during June. Special committees on program and reception have been appointed.

The services will be especially for young people, though all are invited who do not attend other churches. The minister will always preach a short sermon to young people, the subject for tomorrow night being "Better Tools."

Special committees of the young people will have parts in the evening program. It is hoped these meetings will be helpful to the large class of young people which has been gathered into the church activities, as well as to others who might be interested.

CHILDREN'S DAY TO BE OBSERVED

Tomorrow is to be Children's Day at the Presbyterian Church. This is an annual event in the Sunday school plans, and tomorrow will be given up entirely to its observance.

The Sunday school will meet in the morning at the usual time and will be followed by a Children's Service, at which time the address will be to the children and will be illustrated with object lessons. The subject will be "Habit."

At this service it is planned to have all of the cradle roll babies present with their parents for a special feature. The special children's program will be given in the evening at 8 o'clock by the children themselves. The public is invited.

Life Story of Chas. E. Hughes

are historic. They were responsible in the main for Hughes later being elected twice as governor of New York. In the middle of the investigation he flatly refused a mayoralty nomination. From the outset of his career as governor, Hughes was in trouble with republican party leaders. He developed an aloofness from them, and complete independence of thought and action that finally culminated in an open break between him and William Barnes Jr.

New Yorkers still remember a speech by Hughes before the Albany newspaper correspondents as one of the most artistic, vitriolic "dressing downs" that was ever spoken. It simply took the hide off Barnes. The up-state "boss" responded by denouncing Hughes as a party ingrate and traitor to the state convention. Nevertheless, Hughes was renominated and re-elected.

The Hughes fight against the race-track interests was probably the most spectacular of all his moves as governor. Behind it lay a sentimental interest. While practicing law, Hughes was thrown in contact with a stenographer whose father had been imprisoned for embezzlement of money which he "played the races."

When Hughes became governor his first message suggested repeal of the law legalizing betting at race tracks. A committee friendly to the race interests laughed and tabled the bill. But Hughes "got his dander up." He stumped the state for his plan. Killed at a regular session of the legislature, it was later revived and finally forced through by the vote of a sick senator who was carried into the chamber on a stretcher.

Hughes was first mentioned for the presidency eight years ago. He steadfastly refused to be even a receptive candidate. Four years ago he likewise declined to take any interest in politics. Two years ago his name first began to be mentioned as a republican nominee against Wilson.

For more than a year republican leaders have tried to make him "come out in the open" on whether he would accept the republican nomination. They didn't succeed.

Hughes retired behind his fast-graying and always famous whiskers. Hughes has been consistent in his reforms. He startled New York with the thoroughness with which he probed the life insurance scandals and, when governor, made bitter enemies of the "regular" crowd by doing just as he pleased on appointments; by instituting direct primaries; insurance reform and anti-race track legislation.

Because of his reform record and his progressivism of thought, Hughes has been mentioned as an "amalgamation" candidate, who would unite both the republicans and progressives. He isn't popular with the "old guard" because of his habits of almost "insolent independence," as one leader has expressed it, but all republicans admit his strength with the voters.
