INDEPENDENT VOTERS TURNING TO HUGHES

CAMPAIGN leaders in both political parties fully appreciate the advantage the republicans have this year in the fact that their national convention was not dominated by any individual or group. There is not the remotest possibility of the charge that the "bosses" controlled the Chicago convention. In fact, everybody knows that the great majority of the delegates were chosen in primaries where no dictation was possible, and that in the convention the men who have been recognized as leaders in the past were supporters of various candidates, and though willing to accept Hughes, were not for him in the first instance. The Hughes nomination came from a popular demand—not from a dictator.

How different it was in the democratic convention, where all the important arrangements and many of the details were directed by President Wilson, who selected the presiding officers, designated the men who should make speeches, drafted the platform, and will direct the management of the campaign. As to managing the campaign, there can be no criticism, for it is essential that the candidate shall have large control over that. But prior to the nomination, when, theoretically, was free to nominate any person it might prefer, the action of the president in taking personal charge of everything was not only a slap at the men who have been prominent in his party, but it was a demonstration of the one-man character of the democratic organization.

It is already apparent that this difference will have no small effect upon the independent voters of the country. The chief reason why some men maintain an attitude of independence of party affiliation is that they dislike the implied obligation to support a candidate whose nomination has been forced by the power of a dictator or of a machine.

The independent voter turns most easily to the republican ticket this year, and for several reasons. He is impelled in that direction by "a comparison between the man Woodrow Wilson and the man Charles Evan Hughes in stability of character. In solidity of attainments, in sincerity of professions, in courage of performance, in loyalty to conscience, in the rectitude that abides in the heart and not in the larynx," as the New York Sun recently said.

The independent voter also finds the republican ticket most attractive because it represents an "America First" policy in industrial affairs, while the democrats are still wedded to the policy of throwing our markets open to the foreign producer. It is a party with a long constructive record behind it and a policy of constructiveness guiding its future.

But not the least of the influences which will turn the independent voter to the republican ticket this year will be the open character of the republican convention, and the closed, cut-and-dried character of the gathering at St. Louis. And in this there will be many voters heretofore democratic who will class themselves as independents this year. Having had no voice in making up the ticket or framing the platform, they feel no responsibility for its success, and they feel free to vote for the ticket and the man that more nearly represents their views of wise national policies and practices.

Scattered Shots

THESE FELLOWS who have been crying for a chance to get into training for military service should come forward without delay now, and join the proposed national guard organization.

CHARLEY NILES' DEATH in Oshkosh again reminds us that in aviation they are all bound to get it some time.

BUT THE WAR agitation should not deter you if you made a resolution to the effect that you will number your house.

IF THIS REPORTED allied offensive really is a simultaneous advance along every front, there should be something definite accomplished one way or another within a few weeks.

Gives up Great Fortune to Wed Him

Mrs. Madeline Force Astor, that is, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, the widow of New York's richest landlord, gave up an income of $250,000 a year and a home worth more than $1,500,000, to wed another man. Her husband left her a trust fund of $5,000,000 and his magnificent home on Fifth avenue, to be forfeited, under the terms of his will, if she married again. She wed W. K. Dick, the son of a sugar manufacturer, and the trust fund and the home will thus revert to Vincent Astor, eldest son of the millionaire, to whom he had willed nine-tenths of his great fortune. Her little son, John Jacob Astor Jr., was born four months after his father went down on the Titanic.

BURGOYNE JOHNSON

The passing of Burgoyne Johnson of Shippington leaves another gap in the ranks of the Grand Army.

When our country pealed the tocsin; Pealing forth war's wild alarms, And from every town and hamlet Rang the fearful cry: "To arms!"

B. Johnson was among the first to respond to the call. He participated in many battles. His reminiscences of Shiloh was both vivid and mournful; he saw General Albert Sydney Johnson fall wounded from his horse, and saw him carried from the field in a dying condition.

Johnson was near the river when the "Coronadet" opened fire on the Confederates, and he, with many others, was directly under the arc of her awful rain of shell fire that tore through the enemy's ranks. He was the only survivor of a scouting party sent forth in the night between the awful days of carnage. There was a flash of artillery from the enemy's batteries—and Johnson, with a shattered musket in his hand, stood alone on the morning midnight field of Shiloh.

That was fifty-four years ago. We have just buried him. He has answered the last bugle call. Lord of Lords, King of Kings, keep watch and ward over the spirit destiny of all those who fought to save the Union. Guard their last resting place that they may not be death gardens, planted with forgotten ghosts, pallid images or faded names. Lora King.

Oregon, sell, at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, all the right, title and interest of the above named defendant in and to the following described real property, to wit:

Lot three (3), block two hundred five (205), Mills Second addition to Klamath Falls, Klamath county, state of Oregon, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy said execution, which may be sold separately without material injury to the parties interested.

The proceeds of said sale will be applied in the satisfaction of said execution and decree, and the overplus, if any there be, will be paid into court to be further applied as by law directed.

Casement on Trial

Nobleman Pleads Not Guilty to Treason Charge

shadow over the fashionably filled gallery in the rear.

In the center and to the front of the room facing the judges' rostrum, in plain view of the jury box, was the dock. This structure, usually missing in British civil courts, was erected for the occasion. In front of it sat the king's counsel, junior counsel, and the clerks on eight rows of benches. Solicitors' tables and press reservations took up space at the side and in the rear of the prisoners' position.

Accompanied by a single guard, the prisoners entered the court room from a door at the side. Every eye in the chamber followed the tall, lean and almost gaunt figure of Casement as he stepped to his place and was seated after he had stiffly bowed toward the judges' bench. Not awed in the least, the noted defendant quickly looked about the room and smilingly nodded to several acquaintances. He then picked up a large note pad and awaited proceedings. Bailey looked neither to the right or left. He almost forgot the formality of bowing to the bench, and after quickly nodding his head, sat down and folded his arms, in which position he remained.

The charges against Casement are: "High treason, in that he did adhere to the king's enemies elsewhere than in the king's realm, to wit: in the empire of Germany, contrary to the treason act, 1351; also that he did traitorously contrive and intend to aid and assist the enemy."

"Soliciting and endeavoring to persuade British subjects and members of the military forces of his majesty who were then prisoners of war at Limberg camp in Germany, to forsake their duty and allegiance to the king, and to join the armed forces of the king's enemies and to fight against the king and his subjects."

"Committing the same act at a later date and with respect to other persons."

"Circulating a pamphlet in a prison camp amongst British subjects with the object of seducing them from their allegiance."

Persuading and procuring certain persons, amongst others Daniel Julien Bailey, to forsake their allegiance to the king and to join the forces fighting against the king.

"In April of this year setting out from Germany as a member of a warlike hostile expedition, equipped by the enemies of the king, and having for its object the landing on the coast of Ireland of arms and ammunition intended for use in the prosecution of war by the king's enemies against the king and his subjects."
