

Boy Overstays Leave of Absence to Get to Front

By HENRY WOOD
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, July 22.—Every United Press office boy in America, and all the other office boys as far as that's concerned, will be glad to know that Jean Villier, an office boy in the Paris office of the United Press, has been cited in the order of the day several times for conspicuous bravery in the French trenches.

Villier is now nineteen years of age, and has been at the French front for a year and a half.

A year ago he received his first citation and was given for recompense the choice between the decoration of the Croix de Guerre or six days leave at Paris. He disdainfully rejected the former and took the latter.

The joy of being back in Paris proved too much for Jean and he overstayed his leave two days. He was taken before his commanding general and for punishment ordered to the front line trenches.

It so happens that after Paris there is no place in the world that Jean loves more dearly than the front line trenches. It is the only place at the front where a man has a chance to perform those conspicuous deeds of bravery that win him citations with their accompanying war crosses—or trips to Paris. It took Jean but a little time to put two and two together and work out his system.

Since then Jean has been cited to the order of the day four different times. Each time he has taken his six days leave at Paris instead of the war cross. Each time at Paris he has overstayed his leave two days, and each time upon his return to the front he has been ordered to the front line trenches. Jean thinks his system beats anything that anybody ever worked out for Monte Carlo or anywhere else.
