TROUT WON'T LIVE IN DIAMOND LAKE

7,000 FRY PLANTED IN 1913 ARE ALL GONE

Have Either Perished or Gone Over the Umpqua Falls and Can't Return. Bass From the Columbia River Will Be Planted in the Lake Next Summer—Stone Says the Lake is a Delightful Spot.

Despite the fact that 7,000 rainbow trout fry were planted in Diamond Lake three years ago, there is not a fish in the lake today, so far as State Fish and Game Commissioner Charles F. Stone and party, who returned last evening from the lake, could tell. Nor in any of the creeks flowing into or from the lake are any fish to be seen. "We spent two days at the lake, walked around it, a distance of ten miles, and were out on it in a canvas boat, but not a sign of a fish did we see," said Commissioner Stone this morning. "Either the trout have found in the lake something to eat which killed them, or they have gone over the falls of the north fork of the Umpqua and cannot get back. The falls are about 200 yards below the point where the river runs out of the lake, and it is physically impossible for them to ascend it, although they might go over it and live.

"Next summer we plan to stock Diamond Lake with bass fry from the sloughs of the Columbia River. We believe that the bass will spawn in the lake and not descend the river over the falls.

"There are two beautiful, clear, cold streams running into Diamond Lake, Silent Creek and Short Creek. These streams will make splendid water for the bass.

"Diamond Lake is one of the most beautiful bodies of water I have ever seen, and if bass will live there it will become a paradise for anglers. The lake is 87.7 miles from the Klamath postoffice, and all the distance can be traversed by automobile."

Those in the party with Commissioner Stone were Warden Henry Stout, Warden Carey Ramsby, Joe Skelton, George Ketsdever, William Houston and Gus Melhase.

C. F. Stone is First Man to Climb Cowhorn Peak

Although the feat has been tried many times, often by experienced mountain climbers, the first man to climb to the top of Mt. Thielsen, or Cowhorn Peak, is State Fish and Game Warden Charles F. Stone. The feat was accomplished a few days ago, and required six hours from the time Commissioner Stone left his camp, at the base of the peak, until he returned. Five other men in Commissioner Stone's party attempted to reach the top, but gave up the ship long before the summit was attained.

And Commissioner Stone lacked about twenty feet of reaching the very apex of Mt. Thielsen. He and Henry Stout are going back again, probably this year, and try to reach the top-most point.

"The very apex of Mt. Thielsen is about large enough for two men to stand without crowding each other off," said Mr. Stone this morning. "The last twenty-five feet of the peak is not more than ten feet in diameter, and is smooth except for a few narrow crevices. It is our plan when we go again to drive railroad spikes in these crevices, climb up on them as we drive them, and when we get as far as we can go this way, to throw a rope over the apex. We will have to throw the rope about fifteen or twenty feet, and pull ourselves up by it.

"I have been on nearly every notable peak in the world, except those of the Himalayas, and from none is the sight so entralling as the one from Mt. Thielsen, even from the point within twenty feet of the very top, where I was. I could see far into Nevada could see Mt. Shasta and Mt. Lookout, Diamond Peak, Mt. Pitt, Mr. Scott, the Three Sisters, Yamsay and Mt. Bailey, besides many lesser peaks the names of which I do not know.

"Fish Lake is fifteen miles from Mt. Thielsen, and on the opposite side of the peak from that on which I climbed the peak. By leaning slightly and stretching my neck, I got just a glimpse of Fish Lake, and that only with my left eye. So ticklish was my position and so difficult was it for me to maintain my equilibrium that I didn't take a second glimpse or try to see the lake with both eyes."
