Moving Pictures

Many widely advertised beauties of the stage have appeared on the screen only to prove a disappointment to the motion picture public, but in Kitty Gordon, the new World Film star, to be seen at the Star tonight in a film version of the novel, "As in a Looking-Glass," is the guarantee of a vision of loveliness to satisfy the eye of the most critical. Miss Gordon, who has long been known as one of the few real beauties of the stage, has been discovered to be of the type of loveliness for which the motion picture camera has no terrors. In fact, and this must be kept a secret, the famous British beauty appears in her first picture later in going off the summit this year footlights. In the story of "As in a Looking-Glass," which deals with diplomatic intrigue of Washington, D. C., Miss Gordon has a role that gives her exceptional opportunities to display her emotional dramatic gifts. In addition the exigencies of the plot give the star full scope as to costume, with the result that she appears in the most marvelous array of gowns and hats ever seen in a film production.
