Why "He Fell in Love With His Wife." He needed a competent housekeeper. He was very busy with his farm. He was lonely because—

She was sweet and appealing. She sought food and shelter in the poor house. She was poor, homeless and starving, because—

He did not want household details to intrude upon thoughts of his dead wife and his farm. He married her simply to get a housekeeper. But—

She married him only to get a home. But—

Ella Hall and Harry Depp, in the Bluebird photoplay to be exhibited at the Orpheus theater on Sunday and Monday under the title of "The Love Girl," furnishes some of the most thrilling examples of "speed mania" ever photographed outside of pictures taken at motordromes. The manner in which they distanced the speed limit broke all records for the streets of Hollywood, Calif., where the feature was produced. Motors cut an important dash in foiling the villain in the piece. Harry Depp is the boy who is supposed to have taught the girl (Ella Hall) how to guide a motor car. She is shown as an adept pupil, and when the time comes for her to put her skill to practice she literally flies across the screen in breath suppressing dashes.

It is related that when the police officials gave their consent to use the streets for photographing the speed scenes that they had no idea Miss Hall could manipulate a machine so cleverly or travel so fast. The authorities participated in the "chase" with fast motors, being led to the scene by Miss Hall and Master Depp, who were supposed in the play to have located the lair of a band of kidnapers. When Miss Hall cut loose with her machine, it was necessary for the producer of "The Love Girl" to signal for Miss Hall to slow down, in order that the police might keep their machines near enough to be within camera range. And as a result of her daring, it is believed that it will be a long time before Hollywood authorities will let Miss Hall work in a film that requires her to manipulate an automobile. She's too speedy for California streets.
