Arguments of Crawford and Miller Are Assailed

Editor Herald:

The opening political guns were traiped and fired Monday evening, according to schedule, in the democratic campaign in Klamath Falls. No one seems to be very badly crippled or shaken in his faith. If "True Americanism" consists in "frankest discussion of all political issues," Colonel Miller and Judge Crawford certainly failed to grasp the situation. To our utter amazement, Colonel Miller stated that the issue in the present campaign is Woodrow Wilson.

Has it come to pass that national policies are to be subordinated to the interests of an individual? Has it come to pass that any single American citizen, be he democrat or republican, can be elevated to a position before the American people beside which national policies and issues dwindle into insignificance? The minds of the American people today are engrossed, not with drawing parallels between the personal merits of Woodrow Wilson and Charles Evans Hughes, but with contrasting the national policies of which those two American citizens are representatives and exponents; in contrasting the national policy pursued by President Wilson, and the policy demanded of him by the democratic platform of 1912, upon which he was elected and was supposed to stand.

The idea or policy of exalting the individual to the exclusion of nationalism in a presidential campaign speech; to the exclusion of paramount issues upon which the life and destiny of America as a nation may depend, is fraught with too much danger to be lightly passed over. It strikes right at the vitals of our representative form of government, and like the snake in the grass should be promptly scotched. President Woodrow Wilson, as an American citizen, has our unstinted admiration. But President Woodrow Wilson as the exponent of democratic doctrine is another matter, and the attempt to make Woodrow Wilson the paramount issue in the present campaign is an attempt to befog the minds of the people of Oregon.

It seems incredible, almost, that our democratic brethren, in their zeal, should forget that this is a government of delegated powers; that the government is divided into three branches, legislative, judicial and executive; that the specific enumeration of the powers given and granted by the constitution to one branch is an absolute withholding of those powers from either or both the other branches.

We were treated Monday evening by Colonel Miller to a highly colored word panorama of President Wilson's invasion of the legislative branch of the government; also to a highly commendatory recognition of his prowess as a compeller of legislation; and in the next breath he was held up to us as a remorseless exterminator of lobbyists.

The democratic platform of 1912 demanded independence for congress from executive control and encroachment. No president has manifested less respect, according to Colonel Miller's statement, for the independence of the legislative branch of our government than Woodrow Wilson. Colonel Miller told us that one of the first official acts of Woodrow Wilson was to personally appear upon the floors of congress and compel the passage of the currency and federal banking measure never even waited to see what congress would do. Colonel Miller didn't tell us this, but one of the first official acts of President Wilson was his personal appearance on the floor of the house with a demand that all legislation exempting American vessels engaged in coastwise trade passing through the Panama canal be repealed, in the long list of legislation cited by Broder Miller as having been absolutely compelled by Woodrow Wilson, we failed to note anything along the line of national woman suffrage, nor was child labor legislation enumerated as having been compelled by Woodrow Wilson.

There was another seemingly discordant note in Brother Miller's suggestion that the money necessary to build superdreadnoughts could be expended to better advantage in constructing roads. The suggestion somehow didn't seem to fit in well with the democratic preparedness program. It somehow seemed to indicate that their hearts were not in the movement for preparation for defense. It was another disappointment when Brother Miller and Judge Crawford failed to refer to the Baltimore platform and its numerous very excellent planks. In presidential campaigns of the past both parties have been inclined to rely, for support, upon the faithfulness with which they have carried out their platform pledges. It was to be expected that Brother Miller would lean rather heavily upon that support in his earnest plea for support for Woodrow Wilson; but he didn't.

A. L. LEAVITT,
Chairman Republican Central Committee.

Employers Reject

absence during the discussion and investigation preliminary to a final settlement.

It is learned that the government will resist in the investigation, adjustment of differences and enforcement of the agreements made by the opposing forces. The government also may create a plan to avoid future strikes.

A settlement of the controversy now is believed in many quarters to be improbable because the railroad managers three times have rejected the proposal to give the eight hour day a trial. Some of them charge that the proposal is a political move, as acceptance of this offer would put the matter past the November national election. No commission could tangibly settle the controversy before spring.

President Wilson concluded his appeal to the district chairmen of the brotherhoods at 4 o'clock this afternoon. He talked with them for an hour. After the conference the leaders stated privately that the president's proposal for settlement rests primarily on an eight hour day. The chairmen are in a caucus this afternoon. It is predicted that they will accept overwhelmingly Wilson's proposal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 17.—President William Spruille of the Southern Pacific has not received President Wilson's telegram late this afternoon. He is yet undecided whether or not he will go to Washington.

President Rea of the Pennsylvania railroad is spending his vacation here. He says he will not go to Washington.

Car Shortage

It is believed that there is not now, nor is there a prospective shortage of equipment to handle all their products. Without in any way reflecting upon your efforts or those of any other official of your company, we are of the opinion that the Southern Pacific company is derelict in its duty to the people of Oregon unless it can and will take care of the business offering to it, which business, in the nature of things, is solely tributary to your line and dependent upon your efforts to get it to market. Many promises have been made to this commission, and the shippers along your line that they will be fully taken care of, and the people of this state have a right to assume that the industries located on your lines will not be permitted to languish for want of necessary facilities and equipment to move the business offering.

We feel that your company is not blameless in this matter, and that should have long since provided for themselves with more cars, for the fact that the car shortage now complained of is an annual occurrence, and the further reason that we have seen upon you in the past the necessity of providing more cars to handle the products of our people.

Your monopoly of much of this territory is absolute, and we must demand and insist that you supply necessary facilities for fully and adequately protecting the manufacturer and producers therein.
