> As soon as he came into power President Wilson proceeded to turn out of office the men who had devoted many years to the consular and diplomatic service, many of them having risen to high positions at important posts as a result of efficient service in lower places. Turning out the incumbent would not have been so mad, if their places had been filled with men who had some degree of qualification for the work. As a matter of fact, most of the men appointed were men entirely without experience in either diplomacy or foreign business.

One of them was a Texas farmerand doubtless a successful farmer. Annew, at a sacrifice if sold in next other was a preacher who had been serving rural parishes for thirty years. He was quite likely a successful counry preacher, but he acknowledged that he knew nothing about the work of a diplomat.

These appointments were much crit icized at the time by the Civil Service keform League, a non-partisan organization, but President Wilson has been hoping that the matter had been forgotten. Revival of the shameful story will undoubtedly cost Wilson the sup port of thousands of men and women who desire efficiency, especially in the service upon which we depend for na property. Arthur R.
