

War May Bring Removal Marriage Dot in France

By HENRY WOOD
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Aug. 3.—(By mail)—The war promises to end in France what has constituted in the past the great obstacle to marriage—namely, the "dot" that is exacted of every girl who wants a husband.

So deeply is this custom implanted in French life that any girl whose parents are not able to provide her with a "dot" has such a small chance of effecting a marriage as to render it unworthy of either consideration or hope.

French women who have come from families of modest means, often have declared that the necessity imposed on them from the earliest moments of childhood to save every penny in the hope of acquiring a "dot" by the time they reach marriageable age really robbed them of all that goes to make up girlhood in the real sense of the word. While it is generally conceded that this necessity of having a "dot" has made the French woman the most efficient and economic home manager in the world, and also relieves her of "slavedom," yet it has greatly restricted marriage in France. It has entailed also the disadvantage of limiting every girl's choice to that particular class in the social and intellectual scale to which her "dot" will admit her.

Since the beginning of the present war an active propaganda has been carried on in France to put marriage on the American and English basis—a basis purely of love, on which the husband also assumes the full responsibility of providing for his wife and children. Were the hopes of these people to establish "dotless" marriage in France based solely on the success of their propaganda, they probably would not succeed.

A mother who consented to her son's marriage to a girl of modest "dot" has just withdrawn her consent, saying:

"My boy has since won the Cross of the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre, and he is therefore now worth more.

Fortunately for the propagandists they have recently been able to establish that they can count upon a certain great phenomenon that has been repeatedly noticed in past wars, and that promises to settle the question of dots in France, regardless of the tenacity of tradition and the ambitions of mammas with marriageable sons. Statistics have established that following every great war there comes a marked increase in the number of male births over female. The propagandists for dotless marriages have therefore been doing a little investigating, and find ample cause for rejoicing. In one of the maternity hospitals in Paris in a single day in May there were twenty-three births, of which twenty-one were boys. In another hospital on the same day there were seventeen births, of which sixteen were boys.

This has been established as being about the average for Paris at present. The same investigation in the rural districts are even more encouraging. While, therefore, the propagandists realize that immediately following the close of hostilities the death of men brought about through military and naval losses will place the groom very much at a premium, yet they figure that by 1940 and 1950 they can count on such an abundance of potential groom and such a dearth of potential brides as to place the latter at a premium, regardless of "dots."
