COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

DARKENS BEAUTIFULLY AND RESTORES ITS NATURAL COLOR AND LUSTRE AT ONCE

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the sage tea and sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of mess.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application of two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.

HUNTERS URGED TO BE CAREFUL

FOREST SERVICE SAYS NATIONAL FORESTS ARE BEST HUNTING GROUNDS ONLY BECAUSE OF CARE AND SUPERVISION

(Herald Special Service) PORTLAND, Sept. 13.—Emphasizing the destruction of property and human life caused by careless hunters, a warning issued by the forest service urges all sportsmen on the national forests to use the greatest possible care to prevent forest fires and to avoid such accidents as caused the death of Forest Ranger Clarke on the Cabinet national forest in Montana last year. Mr. Clarke was mistaken for a bear by a careless hunter, who fired without waiting to be sure what he was shooting at. To show that such accidents are not uncommon, the warning quotes an estimate of the biological survey that between 150 and 200 persons are annually killed in hunting accidents in this country, and that this number is increasing. Furthermore, it is stated, 15 per cent of all the forest fires in the national forests are caused by careless hunters and other campers. The national forests, it is pointed out, contain the best hunting grounds in the country. The number of game animals is increasing on account of the protection from forest fires and illegal killing which is afforded by forest officers. On many of the forests, deer, elk, mountain sheep and other species are fairly plentiful, while small game is usually abundant. Bear, mountain lion, and other predatory animals are found on most of the forests, and the killing of these meat eaters is encouraged because they prey on domestic stock and the herbivorous game animals. The value of the forests for hunting grounds depends largely upon whether they are protected from fire. Forest fires destroy the range and breeding places of the game and often kill large numbers of the animals themselves, while a great many more are driven out of the country by the flames. Furthermore, streams flowing through burned over areas are subject to such extreme variations of flow, and are often choked up with deposits of sediment that fish cannot live in them. Each year sees an increase in the number of persons who visit the national forests for hunting and other recreation purposes. Every effort is made to encourage this use of the forests. The best indication of a man's fitness to be in the woods, the warning points out, is the care which he shows in handling firearms and fire. None but the most inexperienced tenderfoot will shoot without getting a plain view of his game, while the man who lets his campfire escape or who carelessly drops a lighted match or hot tobacco ashes betrays at once his ignorance of the fundamental principles of woodcraft.

By J. W. ("BUD") PEGLER (United Press Staff Correspondent) LONDON, Sept. 1.—(By mail)—Picture the local ball club down on the border tossing bombs at Mexican trenches; the football, tennis and track star men suddenly whisked from the field of sport. Relatively, that is what England is up against. Sport has been put on ice till the bigger game with K. Bill of Potsdam—a game transcending all sport—has been played to a gory finish. If American ball parks were to be suddenly deserted with no one to beat back the weeds from the infield, and the papers daily were telling how Matty or Cobb or Wagner died in a bayonet charge; if sportsmen's battalions of the country's keenest athletes were being punished under artillery, then the American sport fan might appreciate the English situation. In a small way the gents of the scrambled ear still manage to oblige, but as a rule they divvy their small purses with hospital funds. Sporting meets, field days and football are nix. Soldier events bring out some of the best of the best of the empire's surviving talent, but the public attends not so much in expectation of a contest as to kid itself along and give up for the wounded and destitute. English football differs from the American game, but the Cedrics and Cyrils are rough performers just the same. Mostly the college players come from First Families—that series of outer ripples around the big social splash—for "rugger" is not for the ordinary gink. Their gameness knocks the props out from under some mythical American conceptions. Percy may call his friend "dear boy," and turn his wrist to see the time, but how he battles in a story told by Victoria Cross and the D. B. O. The list of athletic gods who have fallen in action, the Mattys and Cobbs of England, daily grows longer. Others by the hundreds have been relegated to the side lines for good. There's not much fear for the carman. Englishmen think they're 110 per cent good in a shell, anyway, and patronizingly tell an American why. It's because their school stripplings are put in a shell and taught how to row; taught to like it so well they get the eager fidgets when they see an oar. Therefore the home guard logician figures that so long as there are school boys and oars, England will boss the ripples. "The school plan," says an English pappy with gray hair and a russet wattled neck, "is what gives us an advantage on the water and preserves our men in later life. Practice makes for not only skill, but permanent physique as well." A Sunday on the Thames confirms what he says of physique, for there the old boy who looks all in, but isn't, will pull an oar half the day, taking his family for an outing. While English athletes claim superiority for their style of rowing and coaching, they wobble in trying to catch up with the claim with Captain Guy Nichols' showing at Yale last year. The alibi is that Nichols could not be expected to teach his charges what they should have learned as kids and make champion oarsmen of them in the time allowed him. Soccer has hit the skids. The kicking game is shunned more and more by the sport elect because the "lower classes" have had the distressing gall to take it up. It would play merryhell with the fitness of things if a team of uncouth stevedores mixed with a college squad. So the game is falling from favor with the athletic all highest, and the chance of a deadly parallel between the uppers and the lowers is slight. Jimmy Wilde, the fly weight, holds the spot in boxing. Wilde is smaller than a split second, and like most flyweights, hits like Stanley Ketchel. Clever fighters weighing as high as 110 pounds have curled up on the floor under the crushing attack of this 94-pounder. He gave away ten pounds to Johnny Hughes, a veteran, and flattened him as he pleased, so now they've run out old Pedlar Palmer, oiled up the patriarch's joints and started him off to spar exhibitions with Wilde. Jimmy is no slacker. He applied three times for enlistment, but was so small he couldn't even make the bantam brigade. He's a knockout fighter, even if he does hail from Freddie Welsh's native village. Some day Wilde's friends hope to see him matched with Johnny Ertle if Mike McNulty's little charge can be pared down to 108 pounds. Yes, the war has queered the sport business in England. And it hasn't stopped there, but recently reached into the Old Folks' Home and grabbed Bill Squires in far off Australia. Bill made sure Tommy Burns wasn't fighting with Germany before deciding to give up his home and enlist, but he's on the way to the front now. Several used Edison Disc and Cylinder Phonographs.
