The Newest in Dresses

This is the season of Dresses and very few suits will be worn, as the edict of society calls for Coats and Dresses. Serge is the popular material in these stunning Fall models. And "Straight Lines" is the main feature of the new styles. One model is finely pleated in both back and front with the waistline gracefully defined by a loose belt that loops in front. Another model is trimmed with embroidery and finished with broadcloth collar and cuffs. These wonderfully charming Serge Dresses, including the Billy Burke and Redingote models, with long straight lines. Others have touches of pretty peasant embroidery and quaint beading, on display Monday. We can also show you some of the very newest coats being worn on the coast, personally selected by our buyer.

Moving Pictures

The Bluebird photoplay to be exhibited at the Orpheus on Sunday and Monday will be entitled "Behind the Lines." Mary Rider's story formed the basis for the scenario Walter Woods provided for Henry McRae to direct from and the result promises thrilling entertainment for lovers of exciting photoplays. "Behind the Lines" is a military melodrama of tremendous force and interest. The battle scenes are awe-inspiring and the riding and horsemanship in this Bluebird have seldom been equalled. There is suspense created in the action and love interest, which grows in its intensity in a manner to keep the spectator on edge until the final morning. Mary Rider and Edith Johnson play the leading roles, Carey taking the part of an American surgeon employed to discover a relief for much of the suffering in military hospitals, and Miss Johnson, as a Mexican spy, is Carey's associate in the guise of a nurse. Of course the girl's double role is discovered, and the suspense is intensified through her sacrifice in self imposing her system to the test of a serum which has been discovered by her surgeon sweetheart. The girl lingers in the hospital between life and death, and when she finally recovers is immediately delivered to the factional firing squad to be executed as a spy. In this intense situation a troop of United States cavalry projects itself, and the exciting drama is brought to a stirring finish.
