TAX AND LOAN BILL

THERE seems to be great confusion in the minds of some voters regarding the Full Rental Value Land Tax and Homemakers' Loan Fund amendment. It is a most complicated measure. After reading it through one is confused, and hardly knows what it is all about.

Mr. Uren, who drew the bill, has repeatedly acknowledged that it is the same old single tax that the voters have repeatedly rejected at the polls.

THE RESTORATION OF EUROPE

After the European war is over—then what? What is to be done to reconstruct that torn and broken continent? To answer such questions Dr. Alfred H. Fried, the eminent Austrian pacifist, has written a very thoughtful little book, the English translation of which has recently come from the press.

Dr. Fried is the editor of the well known pacifist organ, "Die Friedenswarte," published in Zurich, Switzerland, and in 1911 was awarded the Nobel peace prize for his admirable work in the cause.

"In the previous chapter we saw under what conditions the organization of Europe might be extended. Attention was called to the fact that no artificial construction was to be considered, but rather the development of the germs of organization already at hand.

Fleet Writes of Club's Efforts Toward Progress

The following article was written by Secretary Fred Fleet of Klamath Commercial Club, and appeared in a special edition of the Financial American, published for distribution at the annual convention of the American Bankers Association.

great union created for a specific purpose. It is true that war is a political phenomenon, but it would be false to assume that the organization which is to supersede it must therefore be of a political nature.

"The creation of such a co-operative union would not be without precedent. Such an institution has existed for more than a quarter of a century in the Western Hemisphere in the Pan American union, which rather than the constitutional form of the United States, is adapted to serve as a model for the new European union.

organizations upon state and national affairs is annually becoming more marked. Current public opinion on all non-political questions is evidenced through this medium, and the rapidity with which people have been drawn together by their common interests and the general advancement for which they have been responsible during the last few years has been astonishing.

Instances of accomplishments achieved by commercial bodies are many and varied. Reiteration of the results of one branch of the Klamath Commercial Club's activities during the past eighteen months will serve to show what huge propositions can be set in motion with the tiny pressure it was enabled to apply at the outset.

Klamath Falls, Ore., is situated just midway between San Francisco, Calif., and Portland, Ore. It has been served for some years by a railroad from the south, but an uncompleted gap of eighty-five miles on a projected line to the north left the city a terminal point on a branch line, on which the service was deplorable, and the so-called construction freight rates excessive.

As a consequence, this city, although situated in Oregon, and naturally tributary to Portland, has been compelled to trade almost entirely in the San Francisco markets. Twenty months ago this club set out to remedy this situation. With the belief that Portland, which would benefit from railroad construction into this section, could easily bring sufficient leverage upon the late James J. Hill to effect it, our body went about stimulating Portland to make the effort.

Finally a group of Portland's heaviest capitalists met and asked Robert E. Strahorn, a very successful western railroad builder, to go over the situation and report its feasibility. The result of Mr. Strahorn's investigations is a matter of history. He returned to Portland so enthusiastic over the possibilities that he proposed the railroad development of the entire Central and Southern Oregon, the largest territory in the United States without railroads at the present time.

This happened last September. Since that date, engineers have gone over the project, and surveys for the entire system are being completed. Timber barons have swung behind the movement with greater alacrity than was expected, and have pledged their capital in the enterprise.

This seems to us to be a concrete example of what an influence a small body by persistent effort can bring to bear upon the development of a state and a nation.
