Christofferson's chest was crushed and he died half an hour after the fall. His wife saw the accident and was the first to reach him. The aeroplane was the tractor type Christofferson was making for the allies. He conducted an aviation school and aeroplane factory here. When Christofferson was 1,000 feet in the air engine trouble developed, which caused him to stop the engine and volplane. Suddenly the machine turned over and dropped.

Letters from the People

The W. C. T. U. of Klamath Falls will meet November 21st at the home of Mrs. Seitz. We hope every member will be present and ready to help in new lines of work. There will be a meeting by the Library Club to consider the amendments on Friday afternoon at 2:30 at the Library building.

Let every woman who wishes to vote intelligently be present. Some of these amendments are deceiving if not carefully examined, especially the brewers' amendment No. 315. This not only annuls our present law but gives us something worse than the saloon.

Let us look into these amendments. PHEBE HAMMER, President W. C. T. U.

Espee Should Add Equipment

acquiring an adequate supply of equipment, the commission made the following recommendations to the company:

That active steps be taken by the company to speed the return of its equipment from connecting lines with in a reasonable time, and if under the present rules it is without recourse a determined effort be made to have such rules amended.

That active arrangements be made to move all company material possible during times when no car shortage exists.

That a car distribution bureau, in charge of an officer with authority to act, and supplied with a sufficient force to handle the situation be established by the company at Portland, or an equally advantageous point, at once. By a "sufficiency force" is contemplated, it is explained, not only clerical and other assistance necessary to handle the office work in all its details, but a corps of inspectors or special agents who will continually be in the field, lending assistance wherever possible and keeping the bureau supplied with first hand information as to conditions existing.

That the proper steps be taken to insure routing instructions, where necessary, being delivered immediately upon cars being spotted and to prevent the placing of more cars than can be loaded within a reasonable time.

That necessary steps be taken to prevent loaded cars from remaining on sidings after the passage of the first local freight train in the direction in which the shipment is to move. That all interstate demurrage rates be increased to the basis of interstate rates, and that all free time on interstate export shipments, after the first five days, be abolished.

That rules and regulations be established which will prevent discrimination now existing between Oregon and California industries be removed at once.

Shortages in other years furnished ample notice to the company of the inadequacy of its equipment, the commission finds. It points to the fact that it warned the company a year ago that immediate steps should be taken to avoid the condition now confronting the shippers of the state.

A Treat for Music Lovers

Music lovers and musicians of this city will be gratified to learn that Mr. Glen Ellison, the popular Scotch baritone, will be heard at a private recital here at Houston's opera house on Wednesday evening, Nov. 8. Mr. Ellison was born in Glasgow, Scotland. He is a graduate of the London Royal Academy, where he won a scholarship. There is probably not a country in the world in which Mr. Ellison has not endeared himself by his wonderful voice and amazing versatility, for he has sung leading roles in musical comedies in London and other capitals of Europe, and has taken principal roles in grand opera both in England and Australia. In America, he has confined himself to vaudeville, playing "Big Time" houses throughout the country. Mr. Ellison will present the same program of modern music that has created so much interest in a number of eastern cities, and which is said to be decidedly unique because Mr. Ellison accomplishes something which is entirely new in music, when he sings a duet with himself.

PARIS SLUMS IN MOTION PICTURE

DIRECTOR EDWARDS REPRODUCES THEM IN "THE SPIDER AND THE FLY."

The scenes of the Paris slums in the William Fox production, "The Spider and the Fly," are exact duplicates of certain spots in the poorest quarter of Paris. J. Gordon Edwards, director of the picture, was in Paris a few years ago. Among other places, he visited the Paris slums. He was so impressed with their squalor and filth that he decided to show them on the screen if the time ever came in which such scenes could be used. When Mr. Edwards read "The Spider and the Fly," which was written by Franklin B. Coates, he decided at once that in the scenes of the French capital he could make use of settings showing the slums. He dug out an old notebook in which he had jotted down his impressions, and, refreshing his memory, began work on the settings.

Mr. Edwards located a scenery maker, long a resident of this country, who was born in the poor quarter of Paris. Under Mr. Edwards' direction, the man built and painted the sets called for. As the result of the careful selection of costumes and the care given to the preparation of the scenery, "The Spider and the Fly" has a peculiarly French atmosphere, although in reality the production was made amid the tropic splendors of the West Indies.
