

"How Shall We Boost Klamath Falls?"

Rev. Geo. H. Bennett Grace M. E. Church

Delivered Last Sunday Morning

"A city set on a hill cannot be hid."—Matt. 5:14.

We may say, with all reverence, that Jesus the super-man, was always a booster and never a knocker...

We behold a vision of the future years. Klamath Falls, the city set on a hill, cannot be hid. It is firmly founded upon the hill, resource and opportunity.

Klamath Falls is conspicuous amid great resources. It stands in the shadow of fir and pine forests of 1,500,000 acres—the finest on earth. Stretching around it lie 800,000 acres of fertile land awaiting scientific farming...

And shall not this dream be realized? What will bring its realization? Several things most contributory to this happy result. We must not be blind to any of these essential things. If this city ever realizes its possibilities and attains greatness, it will be because it is made attractive to the outside world.

Let me remind you that the class of citizens, substantial, cultured, moral men, who are the bone and sinew of our commonwealth, will not be impressed with this, or any other city, when on a still hunt for a home and place to rear their sons and daughters—if they find the ethical principles of the cave man and the morals of the stone age prevalent here and tolerating a redlight district.

Strangers of wealth and refinement and moral worth who visit our city usually take a look at our schools and churches. We would expect this. They have lived in an intellectual and religious atmosphere. They will be favorably impressed with our schools. But this most desirable class of people, whom we hope to call down here as investors, have been accustomed to observe their religious privileges in churches which in architecture comport with the public school structures.

If the business men here are not in sympathy with the churches, they should, for business reasons, change their tactics. As good business men, we must look after these interests which are valued by the best type of men and women, whom we hope to win as citizens and investors in Klamath Falls.

But the chief obstacle to the development of the immense resources of Klamath county and of Klamath Falls will be found in its isolation through lack of railway transportation. The policy of the Southern Pacific company since its entrance into Oregon has been a policy of neglect and oppression.

A railway policy like that of James J. Hill—a man of sainted memory—opened Washington to the world and filled the east with knowledge of her resources and her cities. We lived many years in the east and seldom ever heard of Oregon, while the newspapers were full of Washington. And so the negligent policy of the Southern Pacific company has kept Oregon closed to the world and her resources undeveloped.

Yes, there is relief. If the chamber of commerce of Klamath Falls will immediately launch an initiative

Ball Game in England Humorously Described

By J. W. FEELEK. (United Press Staff Correspondent) LONDON, Oct. 1.—(By Mail)—"I learn," wrote a breezy English sport writer, "that the Canadian Soldiers' baseball nine defeated the London American club by nine scores to one in a match last Saturday at Queens club."

In the king's English, that's about what happened. The journalist with the five-gallon hat had to rush to catch his Monday sporting extra so his story was kind of brief. He missed a few details such as the American catchers skill—work in throwing to second with a runner on third and none out. He also overlooked the fact that a gent in a heliotrope shirt pitched big league ball for the star-spangled troupe while his so-called supporters unravelled an ivory repertoire.

"The match," says the hitting account, "was replete with exciting incidents and fraught throughout with keen, though quite amiable rivalry. The Canadian thrower bowled very well indeed."

O'ell, yes; he bowled jolly well. The Canadian strikers belted well, too, and the chap with the odd-looking mask played a ripping game as wicket keeper. The Americans played ball until the third inning. After that, they never had a chance. And a fading sun's last glimmer saw the Saskatoon farmers still running hog-wild on the paths while sundry Americans threw the ball all over the park.

The heliotrope shirt wound up with a Big Ben movement, convulsed and shot the ball to first just as Rolands led off for second. There was a man at first with a glove and uniform but he didn't seem to belong to the club. Anyway he was too proud to stop the throw and the pill bobbed under the club-house steps. Rolands took second and the Canadians began a campaign of frightfulness. The next dumped one in front of the plate and was safe while Neargard, the chap with the odd mask, fondled the ball. A bomber named Doyle fanned. A pitched ball went through Neargard and Rolands scored. Other batters came up and got on through devious means, though no one got a hit. Even the official scorer lost heart and hope in the ensuing moments. Everyone but the runners took a hand in throwing the ball and everyone booted it. Three runs went in before it was over and not a hit had been made.

The rest of the game was like that. Of course some innings were different because the Yanks were worse in some spots than in other. And all the while a human fringe of khaki and blue, Canadian soldiers waiting for the front and those recovering from wounds, kept up a world's service of noise. When they weren't riding Van Nals, the American pitcher, they kidded Gerton and bawled the Scots sung creepy music all over the place. A set of drums gave base to the din, and improvised megaphones carried delicate compliments to American ears.

Somebody said the score was nine to one when it was all over and no one cared enough about it to quarrel. Van Nals lost an uphill fight far from the glades of his native Brooklyn, and allowed only seven hits at that. He walked a few men, say others, but why not, when they'd get on the third strike even if he did strike them out?

But it was all a joke, and if anybody won money he probably gave it to the Canadian wounded whose wives and children got the state receipts. The attendance was the best baseball crowd London has had this year.

The score: Canadians, 9-7-3, Americans, 1-4-1. There were more American errors than the final shows. The scorer got tired in the fourth inning and began counting them by twos.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

HAIR TEA AND SULPHUR TURN GRAY, FACED HAIR DARK AND GLOSSY

Almost everyone knows that Hair Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask of any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it, and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy, and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not indolent for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.
