PINK RIBBONED DOGGIES DOOMED

GOVERNMENT SAYS TWO PUPS CONSUME ENOUGH TO KEEP A WAR ORPHAN AND MUST BE DONE AWAY WITH

LONDON, Dec. 8.—The dog is going to have his day with the ax-man, just as soon as the anti-dog element wins its point.

This doesn't apply to the foxterrier, which has a sense of humor, or other small, sporting dogs, or to the larger breeds, which have their uses on the farm. But the pink-ribboned, brilliantined, carefully combed and valeted animal that goes out at the end of a $9 leash and dines with a butler's attention, is about to get his. He is a drain on the national food supply, and about as useful as the north pole.

London dog-owners picked a bad time to hold their pet dog show. Thousands of fat, fluffy mummy's ducky-wuckums were carried in limousines to the exhibition benches, while details were coming to light of the privations of slum children.

Statistical persons with pad and fountain pen figured that each dog eats a minimum of 12 cents worth of food a day—two pups consuming enough to keep a war orphan in good health. That comparison with the children and the spectre of a pinching food scarcity, put the useless dog at a disadvantage for his life.
