“Deadbeats”

By REV. GEORGE M. BENNETT—M. E. Church.

“Pay me what thou owest.”—Matt. 18:28. Who is the meanest man in town? The deadbeat. But what is his name? His name is legion. The deadbeat is not a new species of the genus homo—he is as old as the race. No more troublesome element is found in society today than the person in debt who can, but who will not pay. The tramp who thinks the world owes him a living without work is a deadbeat pure and simple. The man who enjoys the privileges and protection of this civilized land, and yet who shirks and evades his duties as a citizen is but a deadbeat and parasite. The property holder has the protection of the law, and the benefits of all our institutions—but does he lie to the assessor about his property, does he dodge his taxes? Then he is living off of others, he is getting something for nothing—he is a shirk and deadbeat. One bleak winter day a poorly clad woman stood at the counter looking wistfully at a cheap dress pattern. Her husband came bustling along with his arms full of bundles on his way to the wagon. “Come, Mary,” said he, “it is getting late and growing cold, and we must start for home.” “But John,” said she, “I would like a piece of this goods for a dress; it is cheap, and I need it.” “Yes, I know,” replied her thrifty husband, “but times are hard, and we’ve got to pay the mortgage, and we can’t afford it just now.” So he hustled on toward the door. But just as he put his hand on the latch he turned and shouted: “O, say, Bill, I forgot something. Put me up 50 cents worth of tobacco.” And this is another species of deadbeat. The soul of such a man is so small that it would rattle around in a mosquito’s bladder. Deadbeatism originates in selfishness. Selfishness is so great a sin that God placed its prohibition among the Ten Commandments when he said, “Thou shalt not covet.” The selfish man seems to have the notion, “I am better than you; my interests are more important than yours; my desires must be gratified, no matter what becomes of yours.” He forgets past favors; he laughs at present obligations; and is deaf and blind to warn-

To Train School Boys

Captain E. Z. Steever of the United States army has been assigned by two war departments to instruct school boys in Chicago, Kansas City, Denver and other Western cities in the rudiments of military science. He did this work successfully in the public schools of Washington, and then spent one year on the Mexican border.

ings of a coming day of reckoning. Society passes judgment on the deadbeat and holds him in utter contempt.

“Pay me what thou owest,” cries the business man. The merchant is a public spirited man, and a real public benefactor. He sells his goods on credit. So he really loans his townsmen his property on their word of honor to pay as soon as able. The merchant tides many a family over times of shortage and personal need. There are times when everybody must buy on credit. Poverty is no disgrace—it is very inconvenient. But it is a disgrace and a crime to run a big bill at a store, and get miffed when asked for payment—and then go and run an account with another merchant to the limit of credit, then get miffed again—and so bilk all the merchants in town. Then what does this deadbeat do? O, he sends cash in advance to Shears & Sawbuck across the continent for his supplies. So he knives his benefactor, the friendly merchant; he destroys his own reputation for honor, and he kills his town.

An old merchant in an Eastern city told me in confidence one day: “Elder, this town is full of deadbeats.” But, of course, that cannot be true of Klamath Falls, where people are so thrifty and hospitable, and where money flows like water. But do you know, the deadbeat is the enemy of every one in town; for the merchant must raise his prices a little to the trade to cover his losses on deadbeats. So it adds a little to the high cost of living. The deadbeat is a rather expensive luxury.

But, after all, what is a deadbeat? Only a thief in disguise. He is too great a coward to steal, like any honorable horse thief; he does not entice money out of you with a gun, but with smooth talk and hypocritical promises; he takes your property under false pretensions—so he is a liar as well as a thief. Sometimes the deadbeat wears the cloak of religion. Sometimes he is found in high station in the church. His condemnation then is only greater. Such a hypocrite proves nothing against religion or the church. He only proves he is devoid of religion, and is false to the church. And do you know, some men entertain the idea that they will do the paying while their wives do the praying—and they will slip into glory on their wives’ religion. But Jesus spoke of such men as thieves and robbers who would climb into heaven some other way than the way God ordains.

“Pay me what thou owest,” cries the Lord. How much do you owe the Lord? You owe him one-seventh of your time. How shall we keep our Sabbath holy? In such a way that we find rest, recreation and recuperation of body, mind and soul. “This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it.” But you owe him something else. You owe him a tithe of your income. The Hebrews paid a tenth to maintain religious instruction and world evangelization. “Give as ye are able.” Yet—but give! Cut in two those luxuries. Give half of your useless and expensive luxuries to the promotion of Christian citizenship here at home and abroad. Don’t be a common deadbeat.

Moving Pictures

Rex Ingram, who provided Bluebird with its recently successful attraction, “The Chalice of Sorrow,” will present another of his tragic and still incomparably beautiful productions at the Orpheus on Sunday evening, when “Bluebird Day” again is reached at that popular photoplay center. Cleo Madison is again the star, and “Black Orchids,” the Bluebird she now appears in, provides her with even better opportunities to display her native artistry in an intensely emotional role. “The Chalice of Sorrow” was noteworthy for beautiful photography—“Black Orchids” is said to be still better. The proud and beautiful Zoraida had wrecked men’s lives, spurned their love and lightly cast them aside, one by one her victims fell in prostrate adoration of her fascinating charms. She lived to gratify her own vanity and died in payment of the penalty of her heartlessness. “Black Orchids,” the Bluebird photoplay announced as the attraction at the Orpheus on Sunday and Monday, will have beautiful Cleo Madison as its star and in unfolding the gripping plot, there will be a lesson for every maiden who looks lightly upon the love of an honest man and lives to haunt her admirers in satisfying her own caprice.

“What the People Say,” as the Star tonight, deals with a problem of a very young woman who is used to every luxury, confronted with the question of choosing between the man of her heart and the man who can give her the luxuries to which she has been accustomed. Persis Cabot, daughter of a multi-millionaire, meets a young officer, Harvey Forbes, coming from the Philippines, and they fall desperately in love. Owing to her father’s financial reverses, it is impossible for her to marry Harvey Forbes. She contracts a marriage with Willie Enslee, whose immense fortune makes it possible for her to re-instate her father and give her all the luxuries she has been used to. The marriage, of course, is a failure. Persis meets Forbes at a reception given by the ambassador, and they both confess their love to each other. Persis discovers a liaison of her husband with a former mistress, and decides that she has a right to take the love which Forbes offers her. On the first occasion of their being alone together, Willie Enslee discovers them, and accuses Persis of infidelity. Forbes commands her to choose between them. Persis refuses and Forbes leaves her in desperation. Left alone together, Willie, maddened by jealousy, stabs his wife. A newspaper reporter visits the house and gains information which leads him to believe that Forbes is implicated in the attempted murder. He also visits Forbes and informs him of the fact that Persis has been stabbed by her husband. Forbes hurries back to the Enslee home and tells Persis that he will take her with him, even though she is not willing to go, as they are mated to each other. After the necessary divorce proceedings have been obtained Persis marries Harvey Forbes. At the Star tonight.

John Battleby Watts, a wealthy promoter and breakfast food manufacturer touring Europe with his new wife, loses partly through carelessness but more through foolishness, his wife’s $20,000 necklace. What did he do? He immediately bought her a duplicate for 20 cents, expecting to have the other one in a few days, and to his delight his wife did not realize that she had been deceived. But, alas, they are to leave for America, and no trace of the string of pearls. What would you do to prevent the customs inspectors from discoloring the false jewels to your wife? This is the problem Donald Brian, the popular stage star, faces in the Famous Players’ farce comedy, “The Smugglers.” Sidney Olcott, who is the director of many notable Famous Players productions of this screamingly humorous photoplay on the Paramount program. The Star will show “The Smugglers” commencing Sunday night.
