Everybody Is Now Doing It

Deer hunting is getting to be a thing of the past. It almost seems that before long the people of the Klamath country will be compelled to take some means to protect themselves from the animals when they travel the county roads. Sunday morning Ben Reed had to shoot one with a revolver while coming home from Ashland in his car, and that same evening Sam Smith, while returning home from the same place over the Green Springs road found it necessary to kill another buck with a .22-calibre rifle, commonly called a pea gun. Sam was rather peeved over the circumstances, saying it was rather late when he left Ashland, and he didn't like to lose the time. From the time they first saw the deer until they had it cleaned and on the running board occupied forty minutes, and much of that time was consumed in digging up the gun from under a load of fruit, etc. And, of course, that made it late when they got to Klamath Falls.
