Moving Pictures

Probably the most timely screen play of the moment is "The Food Gamblers," produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan at the Triangle studios, which will be shown at the Star tonight. Eida Millar, who appeared in "Her Excellency the Governor," has the role of the young newspaper woman, who exposes a ring of prominent men engaged in "food gambling." Wilfred Lucas has the role of Henry Havens, food commissioner. This Triangle picture is said to be alive when dramatic action, as when the young reporter breaks into the food gamblers' offices and declares she will imprison them as traitors to their country. She is aided by the food commissioner in carrying out her plans, but not until the ring of grafters have managed to convict her on the trumped-up charge of selling "dope."

Jack Gardner, starring in Essanay's "Land of Long Shadows," has been spending his idle moments riding across snowfields on a dog sledge. Mr. Gardner and his company were up in the Canadian Northwest and Alaska for the past month, filming the picture. At the Temple tonight.
