Big Harvest Follows
Unfavorable ConditionsBy F. L. KENT, Field Agent
PORTLAND, Jan. 2.—Generally speaking, the season of 1917 was one of the most unfavorable the state has experienced in many years. Beginning with the fall of 1916, the lack of moisture greatly retarded fall plowing and seeding. Summer followed and in the wheat belt did not have sufficient moisture for proper seeding until too late in the season, hence the usual fall seeding was, for the most part, "done in the dust," or postponed until spring. With a poor start, the fall sown wheat was not in condition to withstand the unfavorable winter conditions, and about 20 per cent of the acreage seeded in the fall was re-sown in the spring, either to wheat or other grains. In a normal season this winter killing of fall sown grain is almost negligible.

The 1916-17 winter conditions were also very unfavorable for the production of livestock. The lack of early fall rains prevented the normal growth of pastures and ranges, which, combined with early snows, necessitated the feeding of hay to range stock about a month earlier than usual. Deep snows and continued cold weather thruout the winter, in the principal stock sections, still further added to the increase in normal feed requirements. As a result the hay supply was entirely exhausted in most sections, and hay and grain had to be shipped in and sometimes hauled long distances. These unfavorable conditions were intensified by reason of the spring season being three or four weeks later than normal.

Spring and summer conditions were likewise way below normal. The weather continued wet and cold until late in the spring, and the summer was very short of rainfall. In some sections there was absolutely no rain after the middle of May, and many fields of corn, potatoes and beans did not get a drop of rain from seed time to harvest. Hot winds in July also added to the general unfavorable conditions. All things considered, there has probably never been a less favorable season for crop and livestock production in Oregon than that of 1917. But fortunately, there has never been a better harvest season. Even with the shortage of labor, it was possible to harvest all crops, even including hay, fruit and hops, with practically no loss due to weather conditions. And the good prices prevailing gave a total value to the aggregate 1917 crop considerably in excess of the value of the bumper crop of 1916, for which very good prices also were obtained.

LITTLE BY LITTLE

During the past year the demands on all the people of our nation have been great, and particularly has this been true of the people of the Klamath country. Fortunately, indeed, is the business man who at the close of the old year can show a balance on the right side of the ledger and a substantial increase over the previous year's business. In the year 1909 my lot was cast with the people of the Klamath country. Little by little my business has grown, and each succeeding year has shown a substantial increase over the previous year. In appreciation of this growth, I wish to express my sincere thanks to the people of Klamath Falls and Klamath County. At the close of another year, when we come to count the loss and the gain, may we all find ourselves a little farther along the right of way than we are today.

Athletic Outlook
For Coming Year

By CHARLES A. DEAN, President Amateur Athletic Union of the United States

The year 1918 is going to see more athletic competition than at any time in the history of our country. Most of it will, however, be of a different nature than the competitive athletics we have been accustomed to for many years. The United States government is developing the greatest lot of athletics that the world has ever known, and altho they may not have the systematic physical training that the Germans have had, it will not take this country many years to surpass them, if the athletic training in connection with the military training at our various army and navy camps is kept up the same as in the past six months.

It has been proven the past few months that athletic training and competition are as big an essential to military training as shooting or bayonet practice. Instead of our biggest competitive games and meets being open affairs this coming year, most of these are going to be in connection with army and navy camps. Nevertheless just as many athletic meets should be held, and I believe will be held, as in former years. The performances may not be as classy, but we still have the athletes to draw from who are either under or over the draft age, besides the athletes now in the service and adjacent to centers where meets will be held.

As regards championships, all the national championships in every line of sport will be held, and an endeavor made to have the fourteen different associations of the A. A. U. hold all their sectional championships also. These championships as well as all the big open athletic meets the coming year should be, and 90 per cent of them will be, run for the benefit of athletic equipment funds for the different camps or for the camps of our soldiers across the water. The football season just closed has netted thousands of dollars for this fund for the different camps, and the indoor season, which is so much longer, should net thousands of dollars additional.

Yesterday Big Day
at Pasadena, Cal.

PASADENA, Jan. 2.—"Patriotism" as shown by the fighters in the camps and trenches, and the war workers at home, was typified in its many aspects by floral floats here in the twenty-ninth annual tournament of roses New Year's Day, given this year for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

Football, counted upon of late years to pay expenses, was on the program as the afternoon feature. War caused the abandonment of the annual East vs. West game, and men from Camp Lewis and the team of the Mare Island Marines were on hand for a military contest.

The parade, a feature of the Pasadena winter season since 1890, followed a line of march thru the city streets and along boulevards to Tournament Park, an athletic field acquired for the tournament, with a seating capacity of 23,000 persons. The parade was more than two hours in passing a given point.

Says Canada Gets Sugar Needed
By Americans

Claus Spreckles, president of the Federal Sugar Refining company, and known nationally as an authority on the subject of sugar, told the senate committee in Washington he had promised the food administration he would pay a certain price for raw sugar. He had adhered to the agreement, but higher prices were offered by foreign agents, and the supply that would have remained in this country normally, went to others. He said if he could get sugar he would reopen his refinery.

NEW YORK

The great leaders of the Zionist movement in the United States have since the capture of Jerusalem by the British forces been actively engaged considering its effect on the Jews of the United States and the world. Many of them have expressed themselves as being particularly pleased. Among those intensely interested are Justice Louis D. Brandeis of the United States Supreme Court, who is the honorary chairman of the provisional Zionist committee; Dr. Harry Fried-enwald of Baltimore, president of the Federation of American Zionists; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York, Miss Henrietta Broid of New York, president of the Hadassah, the women Zionist organization of America; Jacob De Haas of Boston, secretary of the provisional committee, and Mrs. Joseph Fels of Philadelphia, whose husband was the late philanthropist.
