As a British Officer Dresses in Mesopotamia

When a British officer is leading his troops in the hot sands of the deserts of Mesopotamia he must dress for comfort, despite all the rules of the army about uniforms. Look upon these trousers cut off above the knee, and it may then be realized how hard fighting is in this scene of the war.

Huns Criticise Their Rulers Eastern Policy

AMSTERDAM, May 7.—In the course of a sharp criticism in connection with the recent events in Ukraine, the Vorwaerts of Berlin states that affairs in the East are in a deplorable condition. "The peace concluded there has become a peace calculated to scare away opponents still at war with us," the newspaper says. "It was agreed with Russia that Esthonia and Livonia would remain under its sovereignty," the Vorwaerts continues, "and three weeks later a personal union of these countries with Prussia was benevolently considered.

We see only enormous political damage being done in Ukraine, and not a morsel of bread to be supplied Germany from that country." The Berlin Tageblatt says: "We cannot deny that we have not succeeded in winning the affection of the population under our military rule of Lithuania, not to speak of Poland. It is precisely the same in Ukraine. Even optimists may see that the eastern structure stands on a very unstable foundation. It was always clear that Ukraine, at the earliest possible moment, would seek union with Russia."

Sells Twenty Skunks To Help Kill One

CLEARFIELD, Pa., May 7.—Mrs. Charles F. Sloppy lives in the heart of the Alleghenies, and spends the lonely days of the winter reading the newspapers and trapping the fur-bearing animals which may still be found in the fastnesses of the forest. She has been deeply interested in the progress of the war, as are all the mountain people of Central Pennsylvania, and when the news of the Third Liberty Loan reached her humble home she decided to lend to the government such money as she had accumulated from her winters' work. So one morning she walked fifteen miles into Clearfield, and entering a bank asked for eleven $100 Liberty bonds. These, she explained, as the receipt was being made out, each represented twenty skunk skins. She expressed her sincere regret that she did not have the "hide of the kaiser to sell with those of other skunks." Mrs. Sloppy has sixty traps scattered thru the mountains, and she is usually rewarded with pelts enough to make her daily round of the traps well worth while. But her captives are not always skunks. Occasionally she gets a mink, for which the traders cheerfully pay her $13, and frequently a weasel, which is almost as valuable. Mr. Sloppy is a ginseng farmer, and he, too, has been able to buy Liberty bonds to the value of $1,000. But he earned every cent of it from his last season's "digging."

Both Ends Against The Middle

The consumer wants to pay a low price for meat. The farmer wants to get a high price for cattle. The packer stands between these conflicting demands, and finds it impossible to completely satisfy both. The packer has no control over the prices of live stock or meat, and the most that can be expected of him is that he keep the difference between the two as low as possible. He does this successfully by converting animals into meat and distributing the meat at a minimum of expense, and at a profit too small to be noticeable in the farmer's returns for live stock or in the meat bill of the consumer.

Swift & Company's 1917 transactions in Cattle were as follows:

	Average Per Head
Sold meat to Retailer for	$68.97
Sold By-products for	24.09
Total Receipts	$93.06
Paid to Cattle Raiser	84.45
Balance (not paid to Cattle Raiser)	$ 8.61
Paid for labor and expenses at Packing House, Freight on Meat, and Cost of operating Branch distributing houses	7.32
Remaining in Packers' hands as returns on investment	$ 1.29

The net profit was $1.29 per head, or about one-fourth of a cent per pound of beef.

By what other method can the difference between cattle prices and beef prices be made smaller, and how can the conflicting demands of producer and consumer be better satisfied?
