"PARENTAGE" IS FILM OF HIGH ORDER

The film feature "Parentage" screened at the Star theater last night is something distinctively different from anything placed before the local public heretofore. While it is generally admitted that the lives and temperaments of the parents are reflected in the dispositions of the children, the truth of this principle is indicated with startling emphasis in the careers of two young men from their childhood days into manhood, shown in this unusual film.

It has a strong human appeal and brings out forcibly the shallowness of worldly wealth, where love and thoughtfulness are lacking. The vital need of guiding the children carefully through their character-forming days is brought out in a way to make everyone pause for reflection and to make parents realize their tremendous responsibility. The story is clean and the moral is high. There's a lesson in every reel.
