LADIES' HIGH HEELS ARE NOT BANNED

INDOUBT REPORTS REGARDING SHOE STYLES DURING WAR RECEIVED BY LOCAL MERCHANT

Many misleading statements are being circulated with reference to regulation of the shoe styles by the government, according to L. G. Van Bellen, local ladies' shoe merchant.

"The report that French heels have been banned for the duration of the war is without foundation," said Mr. Van Bellen today. "Neither is there any truth in the statement that styles must be restricted to black, tan or white as far as the year 1918 is concerned. The manufacturers and retailers are both working in close harmony with the war service council toward eliminating waste and extravagance in footwear and to work out every conceivable economy that will save leather and material.

"Shoe dealers are now working under regulations imposed months ago by the government board, by which heels may be 3 1/2 and 3 inches high and two shades of gray are permitted. Gray will be eliminated after March 1, 1919. However, it was found that there was already a considerable quantity of other shades of leather tanned and in stock, and permission has been given to make this material up into shoes, as no economy would result in forcing this material to be held until after the war.

"A great many people have the impression that the wearing of fancy shoes during the war is unpatriotic. This is misleading, as the stand taken by the government is that it is true economy to use all materials on hand and we have been given ample time in which to do this, and to release material that would otherwise be tied up in materials that could not be used until after the war."

Conservation

Everyone knows the need of conservation, but few realize that buying good shoes is the one way of conserving leather.

If you buy shoes of the best materials they will wear longer—cost less in the end—you will be wearing fewer pairs per year and make a money saving as well.

We help our customers conserve and economize by offering them the best that money affords. We believe in the saying that "the best is cheapest in the end."
