War Industries Labor Supplied By U. S. Board

Washington, July 26.—On August 1, the supplying of war industries with common labor will be centralized in the U. S. employment service of the department of labor.

A survey of the labor requirements is being made, and in order that each community may be fully protected, rulings have been issued that no labor shall be transported out of any community by the U. S. employment service without the approval of the state director.

The above action was found necessary to overcome a perilous shortage of unskilled labor in war industries. This shortage was aggravated by an almost universal practice of labor stealing and poaching.

While the restrictions against the private employment of labor apply only to common labor at the present time, these restrictions will, as soon as possible, be extended to include skilled labor.

This drastic change in the nation's labor program has been found necessary in order to protect the employer and the employed, to conserve the labor supply of the communities and to cut down unnecessary and expensive labor turn-over.

While non-essential industries will be drawn upon to supply the necessary labor for war work, the withdrawal will be conducted on an equitable basis in order to protect the individual employer as much as possible.

Under the operating methods adopted the country has been divided into 13 federal districts, each district in charge of a superintendent of the U. S. employment service.

In each community there is being formed a local community labor board, consisting of a representative of the U. S. employment service, a representative of employers, and a representative of the employed. This board will have jurisdiction over recruiting and distributing labor in its locality.

The requirement that skilled labor must be recruited thru the sole agency of the U. S. employment service does not at present apply in the following five cases:

1. Labor which is not directly or indirectly solicited.

2. Labor for the railroads.

3. Farm labor, to be recruited in accordance with existing arrangements with department of agriculture.

4. Labor for non-war work.

5. Labor for establishments whose maximum force does not exceed 100.

When the survey of labor requirements has been made and the aggregate demand for skilled labor in war work is found, each state will be assigned a quota, representing the common labor to be drawn from among men engaged in non-essential industries in that state.

These state quotas will in turn be distributed among localities. Within each locality, employers in non-war work, including those who are only partially in war work, will be asked to distribute the local quotas from time to time among themselves.

The object is to keep any community from being drained of labor, and to use local supply, as far as possible, for local demand. The situation, however, is such that in certain cases some men may have to be transported over long distances.

This is probably the most drastic action that the government has taken since putting the national army draft into effect. The absolute necessity for this program can be seen when it is realized that in Pittsburgh

For instance, there are advertisements calling for men to go to Detroit, while in Detroit street cars there are posters asking men to go to Pittsburgh. This same condition is apparent all over the United States and in the consequent shifting of labor a great part of our war effort is dissipated.
