DIVERS' WORK
SAVES VESSEL

One of the most remarkable feats in the history of American labor, according to Capt. Louis Turner, representing marine underwriters, was the submarine repairing of a steamer salvaged on the California Coast by a diver named Theodore Wicks. The success of this man in this perilous work made it possible to raise the vessel for further important service in the government's war program, where shipping is so urgently needed.

There were fully 100 patches of temporary nature to be put on the shattered sides of the vessel while it was bumping about on the rocks, making it by all odds the biggest job of the kind ever attempted on the Pacific coast. The biggest patch was 10 feet wide and 16 feet long. Three layers of inch plank, with canvas between, were used in patching. This kept the water out while the ship was being pumped.

Large numbers of shipping men visited the dry dock where the ship went after Diver Wicks' exploits, and were astonished that it had been possible to salvage the vessel at all. The diver's work is viewed all along the coast as an inspiration to labor in its great task of winning the war.

LIFE MADE
UNPLEASANT
FOR MONARCH

JASSY, RUMANIA, Aug. 26.

(By courier to Paris correspondent of the Associated Press).—Threatened with the bludgeon of German militarism and with loss of the throne of Rumania if they offend the sensibilities or oppose the policies of their German masters, the fate of King Ferdinand and Queen Marie, of Rumania, is most unhappy. Germany has resorted to every means of making their lot as uncomfortable as possible.

Living today in the little village of Bicas, on the Rumanian-Austrian frontier, in what amounts to a self-imposed exile, every convenience or accommodation that might be considered a privilege has been taken from them by the Germans, who now have the country and the people completely subjected and shackled.

No opportunity has been lost by the Germans to exact retribution from the Queen for her action in bringing Rumania to fight against the Central Powers, and no discourtesy or slight is considered too great for the King for what the Germans consider his betrayal of the Hohenzollern family and his own blood relatives.

When the Queen sought recently to write to her mother, the Duchess of Edinburgh, who is now living in Gotha, Germany, the German authorities told her she could do so only by sending the envelope unsealed and having the contents examined by the censor. In the letter the Queen attempted to describe her anguish of mind and heart and the harshness of the German rule, but every such reference was summarily cut out by the censor.

Again, when Her Majesty cabled to the American Red Cross appealing for the sympathy and support of the people of the United States, the German officials in Jassy threw every obstacle in the way and finally passed the message in an expurgated form.

The King likewise is made to bear many unpleasant experiences. When recently the Rumanian Parliament was preparing to re-assemble for the purpose of ratifying the German peace treaty, King Ferdinand was asked to open the proceedings. His Majesty found it a very painful duty. To avoid fulfilling it, he kept to his bed for three days and insisted he was no equal to the task. On the third day, M. Marghiloman, the pro-German Prime Minister, came to the Palace with an ultimatum. In the most uncompromising manner he said to the King.

"Open Parliament today or you will be forced to accept my resignation as Premier, which I now hold in my hand."

The King realized that if Marghiloman resigned a new Cabinet would be formed, with M. Carp, his bitterest antagonist as its probable head, and that his dynasty would then be overthrown. So he yielded to Marghiloman's threat and went to the National Theatre in Jassy, where the sessions of Parliament are held, and delivered a perfunctory address which occupied not more than four or five minutes. Only the members who avowedly German were present.

Toward the German authorities the King and Queen are forced by circumstances to maintain an attitude quite contrary to the innermost feeling of their hearts. The royal family and indeed all the loyal Rumanians place all their hope in the United
