Owing to the poor ventilation and heating facilities of the Library Club rooms, the Red Cross work which has been carried on there will be continued thru the winter in the banquet room of the Elks Temple, which has been kindly opened to the ladies for this purpose.

While there will be some change in the character of the work to be done, yet the need is tremendous, and the definite calls will continue to come, especially for all kinds of refuge work. No worker should think for a moment of letting up in the work, but plan to give even more time, if possible, to help meet the appalling needs, the extent of which we will not know until the internal conditions of the stricken countries are revealed. Tuesday and Friday afternoons will be the sewing days, as heretofore.
