FRIDAY, JANUARY 31, 1919

In furtherance of her work of gathering data for a complete and correct history of the part Klamath County played in the World War, County Historian Mrs. R. A. Wattenburg is desirous of receiving the names of all the Klamath county boys who enlisted for the war. She is in a position to secure this information as it relates to those who were drafted, but a large number of the boys enlisted before the draft and after it went into effect. Many of these joined in other cities, some even going to Canada. It, therefore, becomes necessary to gather these names from every possible source, list them and eliminate duplication and then forward them to Salem. The Herald wants its readers to furnish this information to Mrs. Wattenburg. Send in the names of everyone you know ENLISTED, and with his name send this information: His name, address, names of parents, if you know them, what branch of the service he joined, when and where, whether he saw overseas service, division and company. If you have a photograph of him, send it along, together with any newspaper clippings referring to his service that you may have.

This information is separate and distinct from that asked for in relation to the service flags, or any other subject. Send all of this information that you can, and if it is incomplete write at the bottom of your letter: "This is all the information I have." You will not be asked for more. Do not burden Mrs. Wattenburg with further inquiry. This article asks for all she wants to know. Send her what you have, and if you fall in any particular, she will communicate with you further, unless you indicate on your letter that you have sent in all you know. This work is being done by Mrs. Wattenburg gratuitously, because of her pride in what Klamath County has done, and the readers of the Herald are asked to lend their cordial cooperation in a work that will eventually become of great historical value to the archives of the state.

HOME COMING BOYS SHOULD BE GUARDED

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 31.—"Don't fool the boys when they come back, was the plea of Russell C. Lowell, of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, when he spoke here recently.

Mr. Lowell said he thought that some of those who had been maimed in the war were spoiled for the future by being feted too much and adored as heroes when they reached their own home towns. He cited several cases where young men had practically refused to undertake to learn new trades after being unfitted by their wounds for continuing at their old trades, because, they said, they did not need to work now.

After a time, Mr. Lowell declared, a man loses of such idleness and false honor, and he either becomes mentally sick and despondent or gets quite crooked in his methods and begins prying instead of trying to earn a living.

Mr. Lowell stated that one of the chief difficulties the Federal educational system is encountering is that of getting hold of the maimed men when they have returned to this country. They filter back to their own districts, and unless promptly taught to start life anew are apt to relapse a mental stage where it is difficult to get them to overcome the real difficulties which exist in the re-education in trades.
